EDWIN M. STANTON.

How His Life Was Believed to Have Been Saved.

General Grant, in his biography, refers to a meeting at Louisville with Edwin M. Stanton, when the Secretary of War had such a cold that Grant expected him to die. Ex-Senator Learned, of Massachusetts, relates the sequel of that meeting in an interesting way. Mr. Learned was at that time President of the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad. When Stanton left Louisville he went to Jeffersonville on his way to Indianapolis. He was met there by Mr. Learned, who had gone there to see about the transportation of troops. A car was set aside for the Secretary of War. It had been used by troops and was somewhat filthy. The hose was turned on to its floors, and it underwent a thorough scrubbing. In the big stoves at either end huge fires were built. It was bitter cold weather, and the car was a long time getting a comfortable temperature. Mr. Stanton, General Anson Stager (since dead), and Mr. Learned and his wife occupied the car. Mr. Learned says that he never saw a man traveling in worse condition than Stanton, who had a congestion that was rapidly closing in on him with a death-grip. He went over and said to Stanton: "Mr. Secretary, I presume as head of the War Department and chief of its allopathic medical branch, you would not feel at liberty to accept relief outside?"

"I don't understand," said Stanton.

"Well, I've been a homeopathist for twenty years, and I know you are a sick man. If you will permit me, I think my wife has her package of medicines along and that I can prescribe for your relief."

"What would you give me?"

"I think you should have stibium."

"What is that?"

"The first preparation of tartar emetic."

Then the Senator told the story of old Dr. Grey, who always prescribed stibium, and had once said he expected to have inscribed on his tombstone, "He prescribed stibium and died." Stanton said: "I don't know about stibium, but I think tartar emetic would do me good." Mr. Learned gave him doses every ten minutes, finally lengthening the doses to half an hour. At Seymour Mr. Stanton was much relieved, but begged Mr. Learned to go on to Indianapolis. Just before reaching that city he got a dispatch which he told the Senator required his presence at Washington as soon as he could get there. Mr. Learned insisted that he would endanger his life by attempting the trip in his condition. "Human life is nothing in times like these," was Stanton's response. He asked for the bottle of stibium and declared his intention of going on to the Capital. The bottle was given to General Stager, with instructions to lengthen the periods of doses to two hours unless the congestion should grow worse, when they were to be shortened. Stanton went on to Washington under this treatment and recovered. Months afterwards he told Mr. Learned that he considered himself indebted to Mrs. Learned's homeopathic medicine case for his life.—Chicago Tribune.

Tempting to Steal.

The practice of placing goods outside shops, thus tempting starving people to steal, is so utterly indefensible that its continuance can only be accounted for on the theory of its greatly stimulating business. On that head a boot and shoe dealer at Birmingham gives evidence which appears almost incredible. Having been reprimanded by the bench for putting a considerable portion of his stock in trade outside his shop, he declared that he could not help himself. He had tried the other plan for seven months, and his books showed that it made on the average a difference of 150 pairs weekly in his sales. According to his story, therefore, he must have sold 4,500 fewer pairs during the period when virtue triumphed over greediness. That was, he evidently thought, far too high a price to pay for doing right, and he therefore relapsed into selfishness, with the result of his having to prosecute a father and son for stealing a pair of boots from outside his shop. The elder received two months' imprisonment, the younger fourteen days' imprisonment and five years' incarceration in a reformatory. Clearly, therefore, however profitable the practice may be to traders, it is very expensive to the general community who have to maintain the offenders in prison. On that ground alone, and putting humanity out of the question, the State has an excellent right to interfere. Moreover, if the practice were prohibited throughout the kingdom all traders would be placed on the same footing, and, as the public are bound to supply their own requirements, there could not be any loss of trade in the aggregate.—London Globe.

VICTOR HUGO.

How He Would Have Punished Marshal Bazaine.

At Victor Hugo's house one evening the question of capital punishment was discussed, anent the commutation of the sentence of Bazaine into perpetual imprisonment. Several politicians who were present blamed this commutation and maintained that no one had ever better deserved death than Bazaine. "No," said Hugo, "I would not have loaded chassepots for him; but, if I had been President of the Council of War, this is what I should have done: I should have convoked to the Champ de Mars the National Assembly, all the troops of Paris, all the people; and there in the presence of that crowd, in presence of that army, in presence of the representatives of the nation, I should have had Bazaine brought forward, dressed in all the insignia of a marshal of France. Then the President of the Assembly would have read aloud the judgment declaring Bazaine a traitor to his country, and condemning him to degradation. Then the senior subaltern officer would have torn off his crosses, broken his sword, trampled his epaulettes under foot, and, the ceremony over, would have said to the degraded man: 'Now, Monsieur Bazaine, go! you are free!' No one can deny the grandeur of this conception of moral and exemplary chastisement.—Paris Morning News.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—In Sinaloa, Mexico, a woman is being exhibited who is seven feet high and weighs five hundred pounds. She is as young as she is charming, being only twenty-six years of age. She was born in Pachuca.—Chicago Times.

—Chief Chemist Bradley, of the Brooklyn Health Department, has discovered pickle manufacturers who use copper sulphate, or blue vitriol, in coloring pickles. Three small pickles are equivalent to a dose of sulphate of copper.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—In the city of Trinidad, Mex., a hen has died which, according to her owner's statement, first saw the light in 1857. Maria Francisco, her owner, has received from her since then 6,371 chickens, of which 2,427 grew up to be hens.

—Big fish swim the waters of the Pacific coast. The Port Townsend Argus says that a halibut was recently caught in Scow Bay by an Indian which weighed 202 pounds and was six feet eight inches long, three feet ten inches wide and fourteen inches thick.

—The total annual catch of menhaden in the United States is about 700,000,000. This seems to be a great number, but blue fish alone are said to consume about 3,000,000 menhaden every day of the summer months on the coast of New England alone. As a matter of fact, menhaden are so prolific that they are practically inexhaustible.

—Can one man be a mob? A Yonkers, (N. Y.) man was ordered to "disperse," and upon refusing to do so was arrested. The legal experts decide that the law applying to a mob or riotous gathering does not apply to this individual, who seems to have been justified, therefore, in not dispersing.—N. Y. Herald.

—The Chinese regard an attack of epilepsy as the occupancy of a man's body by the spirit of an animal, usually a pig or a sheep. They try to keep such spirit by stuffing the patient's mouth with grass, for if it leaves before the return of the man's own spirit—which must be absent during the fit—the man will die.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—There are more subscribers to the telephone system in New York and its neighborhood than in the whole of Great Britain, notwithstanding that the charge in New York is about double what it is there. The number of transmissions by telephone in Great Britain last year was about 41,000,000, and the average cost per message a little over one cent.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Little five-year-old had been watching the flag for celebration. Toward evening, as he looked at the sun, he said: "How does the sun set, anyhow, Grandma?" "When you are older you will understand," was the reply. "O, I know," said the irrepressible, after a moment's pause, "God pulls the string and the sun goes down."—Boston Transcript.

—Harrison Hahn, of Wind Gap, Pa., has a two-year-old daughter whose ears are bent forward and grown fast to the face. The girl was deformed when born. When she became two months old two doctors separated the ears from the face, and tied them back to their proper place, but they returned to their former position and are there to remain undisturbed. Both ears are without the orifice, but deafness is prevented by the girl hearing every sound, no matter how light, through her nose and mouth.—Philadelphia Times.

—The two new craters in Mt. Vesuvius, from which lava has issued abundantly, were opened on the southern side at a height of about two hundred meters above the upper station of the funicular railway. The lava flowed in the direction of Pompeii and Torre del Greco. The stream descends in a straight line for about half a kilometer, and then, turning sidewise, is directed toward the crater of 1872. The new craters present the appearance of a great cleft. The lava has not spread beyond the side of the mountain.

—Among librarians and book-publishers no word is more often used than the term, "Catalogue." John Winter Jones, librarian of the London Museum, uses this word four times on one page. It occurs frequently in the reports of the proceedings of the International Conference of Librarians at London, and yet it is not given in Webster's or Worcester's or the Imperial Dictionary. It has certainly been in use for thirty years among well-educated men, yet every one of the dictionary makers have either missed or ignored it.—Boston Journal.

—The Pembina (D. T.) Express observes this incident, which can best be understood by one who has seen the half-breeds and their primitive teams: "A novel sight was witnessed here last week. A half-breed living on the mountains came to town for a hog, with his pony and Red River cart. He found his two brothers in town, both rather full of profanity, whisky, and combativeness. After considerable difficulty he loaded the two into the cart, in which they soon fell asleep. He then got the hog and placed it carefully between the other two, and began his journey for home."

—Rhode Island is the smallest State in the Union, but she boasts of being first in respect of manufactured products according to population. Rhode Island makes $373.07 worth of manufactures for every one of her inhabitants, while Mississippi makes only $6.64, or in the ratio of $1 to $56.18. Taking the area instead of the population, the contrast is even greater. Rhode Island produces $79,757.75 per square mile, while Mississippi produces only $159.43—about 500 to 1. Rhode Island may congratulate herself upon being so small that there is no room for waste land within her boundaries.—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

—The latest theory concerning Bright's disease and other affections of the kidneys is that they are due to the immoderate use of ice-water and other chilled beverages. Thirty or forty years ago, a physician asserts, when people slaked their thirst with fresh water from well or pump, kidney disease was virtually unknown. Now, however, the general use of ice-water in every household and saloon and the multiplication of soda fountains, cause thousands of persons to abruptly shock their heated internal organs with freezing draughts and kidney troubles have become very prevalent.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Perfumery Trade.

Some kinds of perfumery are worth their weight in gold. The export of fine perfumery is principally from Grasse, Nice, Cannes and Bremen. The business is divided into two parts. The manufacturer extracts from the flowers their essential oils. The perfumer buys these oils, pomades and extracts, and compounds them in several ways.

Only about a dozen of all the fragrant flowers in the world are used in the manufacture of perfumery, viz.: the violet, rose, orange flower, jasmine, tuberose, cassie, lavender, thyme, rosemary, geraniums, jonquil and fennel. The rose and the orange are the most valuable. Of the numerous varieties of the rose, only one is used, the Province rose, single, pale pink, the most sweet smelling of roses; not hardy.

Picking for perfumery occurs in almost every month of the year. It is a paradoxical fact in the business that the bitter orange yields the best blossoms for perfumery. One ton of blossoms yields two pounds eight ounces of oil neroli. The fruit of the bitter orange yields a very fine essential oil, bigarade. It is used in many scents. The orange tree, cultivated for its oil, lasts with care over 200 years.

One ton of the distilled leaves of the scented verbena geranium yields from 24 to 30 ounces of the essential oil. The flowers of the jasmine are picked just after sunset in July, and in the morning, as soon as the dew is off, in August. The jasmine is a peculiarly delicate flower. Its essential oil is so volatile that it cannot be extracted by distillation, the heated water decomposing it is so that only a faint tinge of the perfume is left in the water that passes through the refrigerant.

Like the jasmine, the oil of the tuberose cannot be extracted by distillation. The perfume of the cassie is much used in compounds. The process of manufacturing perfumes is in itself very interesting, especially to the ladies.

A ton of roses yields only two ounces of the attar. If kept at a temperature below 60°, attar crystalizes; if kept open to the air and light, it is easily volatized. Perfumed oils are made by putting fresh quantities of flowers into the finest of virgin olive oil from 20 to 30 different times. The essential oil of flowers has a strong affinity to lard or grease. The latter, rendered as white as snow, is perfectly saturated with the flowers. The process is repeated many times. In this way we have pomade of rose, orange, cassie and violet. The affinity of the perfume of flowers for alcohol is, however, stronger than than for grease. Pomades, immersed in alcohol, are rendered into extracts, the grease leaving the perfume. It is safe to say that, among the numerous articles of toilet, the manufacture of perfumed pomades, perfumed oils and high priced perfumery generally is as a sealed book to many persons.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unprecedented demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

Hence it cures readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—A Baltimore street vender invites the liberal patronage of passers by with a sign on which is inscribed the feeling invitation: "Kum buy or lie bust."—Baltimore American.

—"If a man could only catch fish as easily as he can lie about it," laments a Texas editor. He could, if he only understood fishing as well as he does lying.—Chicago Daily Business.

—The actual number of persons engaged in agriculture in the United States, including their families, is placed at 25,000,000, an increase of 3,000,000 since the last census.—Chicago Tribune.

—During the American civil war five hundred horses were distressed or rendered useless for every twenty-four hours. The Confederate army was crippled for want of horses, while the Northern army was able to secure its supply from the Dominion of Canada.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—The little town of Lafayette, Chambers County, Ala., is taking on airs. A horn is blown at six o'clock in the afternoon as a signal for the closing of stores, and a few minutes thereafter scarcely a soul is seen on the streets. The boys play base-ball from six o'clock until dark.—Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer-Sun.

—The London Truth gives the following original observations on astronomy from a sermon of a Welsh curate preaching to an English congregation: "A starr is but a lill dot in the skyes. Saw many starrs mek one plannat, saw many plannats mek a constellation, saw many constellations mek one milkey way. Six milkey ways mek one curr bo-mallis."

—The Austrian Government has refused to authorize the establishment of private crematories, on the ground that they might encourage crime. The decree states that murders are often detected by the exhumation of bodies, and that, even if bodies were to be exhumed before cremation, there would be no time to apply in every case those delicate chemical tests which are used when poisoning is suspected.

—It is related of a distinguished lawyer who observed that his wife always delayed ten or twelve minutes behind the same town to dinner, being loath to lose so much precious time daily, he compounded the composition of a work which he presented only while he was thus kept waiting. The result was at the end of fifteen years a book in three volumes quarto, which has met with a large sale and is much needed.—Toledo Blade.

—The hedge-hog is very fond of fruit, and adopts a curious way to obtain it. It is known that they often climb walls and run off upon low boughs, and instead of scrambling down in the same manner, they boldly make the leap from the top to the ground, sometimes ten or twelve feet. They fall into a ball in the air, strike upon their armor of spines and bound away unharmed. In taking this jump they have been seen to strike upon fallen fruit, which, thus impaled upon their spines, was carried away by them.—Chicago Herald.

—The first of the five-inch breech-loading rifle guns built at the Washington Navy Yard for the new steel cruisers was recently tested at Annapolis with powder invented and manufactured by a prominent American powder maker. This gun, designed by the Naval Ordnance Bureau and built of American steel, developed an initial velocity of over 1,900 feet a second, with a pressure of only twelve and a half tons per square inch, which is better than has been done by any other gun of its size.—Washington Post.

—An almanac three thousand years old, found in Egypt, is in the British Museum. It is supposed to be the oldest in the world. It was found on the body of an Egyptian, who had doubtless regarded it with as much reverence as he did the Egyptian Bible—"The Book of the Dead"—and, indeed, it is strongly religious in character. The days are written in red ink, and under each is a figure, followed by three characters signifying the probable state of the weather for that day. Like the other Egyptian manuscripts, it is written on papyrus. It is written in columns.

—If walking alone is adopted as the means to counteract the effect of too much sitting, then care should be taken that system enters into the walk. A slow, desultory sort of walk is of no earthly use; it simply tires one without any beneficial result. The walking should be brisk, with the head up and the chest thrown forward. The breathing should be regular and as free as the swing of the limbs. The distance is optional, of course; but two miles ought to be no task for the man who wants to improve his health. The distance can be increased as the pedestrian begins to feel the benefit of the walking.—N. Y. Star.

—It is a singular fact that the population of France is decreasing instead of increasing. The mortality among infants belonging to the poorer classes is appalling. So, also, is the death rate among the orphans or foundlings left to the charge of the communes, who are placed out to nurse, and drop out of life in large numbers during the first year of their existence. This can hardly be wondered at when babies in the first year of their existence are paid for at the rate of only six to fifteen francs a month, and of this sum of from four to ten sous a day the nurse is supposed to lodge, feed and care for the child.—N. Y. Sun.

Pride of Character.

"Register and I'll accommodate you, sir," said the keeper of a one-horse hotel in a wayside place to a traveler from the city as he applied for a room.

"Never mind that. I'll pay in advance."

"But you must register."

"No, I'll be sizzed if I do."

"Why not, sir?"

"Some friends of mine might happen this way some day, and I wouldn't have anybody that knew me find out I'd ever degraded my manhood by stopping at such a confounded beastly place as this for a thousand dollars, sir. No, sir; money wouldn't induce me to take such an awful risk, sir. I'm poor, but gad, sir, I've got a little pride of character for all that."—Chicago Ledger.

GENERAL GRANT.

Toll for the mighty dead!
A noble life hath sped,
A noble spirit fled—
Grant is no more.
Disease and anguish past,
The hero sleeps at last
Where pains no shadow cast,
Life's fever over.

Never less dead than now,
Thy country's savior thou,
To whom her people bow
A common head.
In war, magnificent,
Thy choicest victory went
To heal the bloody rent!
Let this be said.

That since the world began
Has lived not any man
Whose thoughts less self and vain,
Or in the hour
Of victory, supreme
With greatness proved, in theme
For high poetic dream
Or painter's power.

And therefore, in sublime
Honor and vanquished time
With sorrow-wrinkled brow
Above thy grave,
The gray veteran and the blue,
White man, and colored, too—
No more a slave—

Sadly, on bended knee,
Will common thanks to thee,
Who made a people free,
And saved the Union.
When hatred stirred its vipers foul
And darkest thoughts prevailed,
And Eng'and showed a mailed
And lawless hand.

Majestic, stately grand
Simplicity, the land,
Nothing from strife to stand
Thy death deplore.
Part of our lives thou art,
Not from the nation's heart
Shall pass for thee depart
Forevermore.

Welcome is simple shroud,
Thy battle day and night,
For country, God and right,
Shall peals chant
While time itself endures,
Which our love secures
And grateful fame insures
Heroic Grant.

Quite a serious accident occurred at the Friends picnic last Friday at Raisin Center. He is at present improving rapidly.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Memorial service at the Presbyterian church was conducted by Rev. HUT of Napoleon, and all who could attended. Society is all torn to splinters by a Sewing machine lawsuit in which one party is charged with playing a sharp game on her mother-in-law and the father-in-law accused of upsetting somebody aforesaid, raising Sam with family affection, piling up affliction and doing no end of damage, higglety piggiety fashion, that puts the State constitution in quid quod or quiddie, I can't tell exactly which. The jury are so evenly balanced on the did and did'nt testimony that the case has got to be tried over. If they fail to agree on a verdict next time, a stick will be set up and they required to accept its tip-over direction for a Providential decree as it were. This extreme measure must be resorted to, in order to prevent further exhaustion of legal talent. One volume of Blackstone has been thumbed out; one Justice of Peace grown bald-headed, and one lawer drank water twice. The witnesses have been quizzed about every sin by which womanly weakness is strenthened, and are too mad to enjoy ice-cream. The three who secured standing room in a gallery next block, and looked down on the gesturing which preluded some sort of a benediction pronounced over calico and culprits, would have been fined for levity and contempt of court, if they had not secured safety by remaining within heavenly jurisdiction. Nothing has aroused this community like this machine affray since the Afghan war began. Even girls and little boys flock to the hall to hear people insulted by language that would be canceled by a horse-whip if addressed to them elsewhere, and why justice is supposed to be aided by substituting blackguardism for civility, is as puzzling to the gallery class as the bright light was to Paul.

SPRINGVILLE SIFTINGS.

It has been a long time since your correspondent has issued his epistle, but suppose it is for want of news.

The farmers have secured their hay and wheat harvest in good shape and where they have threshed their wheat it has given a yield from 25 to 35 bushels per acre. The oat crop is in bad condition; the past heavy rains beat them down to the ground and do not dry out so they can be secured. The corn was badly broken down but the fall feed is coming on in good shape.

The auction of merchandise at the store of T. H. Mosher, under assignee sale, went off Saturday very well and will continue every Saturday, and in the mean time T. H. Mosher is on hand to show and sell any article that may be called for, at the lowest rates.

Dr. Vaughan has his mother and sister from Springville, N. Y., with him on a visit.

Miss Ellis of Jonesville, has been visiting her uncle, Edgar Hubbard.

Mrs. Asa Aldrich and son of Adrian, have spent the past week at her uncle's, Wm. Queal's.

The picnic for the benefit of the Christian S. S. at Britton last Thursday was a success and did much cred it to the Supt., Dr. Hallock. The address was given by Rev. James Wright and was very interesting and pointed. The Britton band furnished some very fine music and each received a bouquet of flowers from Miss Linnie Coryell in behalf of the school with their best wishes.

Next Saturday will be quite lively as there is to be a game of ball between Onsted and Rome, and a horse race.

Mr. B. Raymond, of Tecumseh, is visiting friends here.

Our Pastor gave us another sermon on sin, excursions, and Sabbath-breaking in general last Sunday. Notwithstanding these sermons, quite a number of the unregenerate of this place took in the excursion last Sunday.

ADDISON ATOMS.

J. F. Fitzsimmons, of Hillsdale, was in town last week looking after the interests of Aultman Miller & Co., of Akron, Ohio. Mr. F. has been Secretary of the Agricultural fair association of that county for several years.

We understand an effort is being put forth to finish the M. E. church and it is hoped the matter will be pushed to success as the building would be a valuable addition to the place if completed.

The grinding ceased at the mills here on Monday in order to adjust some of the machinery of the roller process. It has resumed work however and is turning out the staff of life of an excellent quality.

Mr. George Hodges is about to occupy the wagon shop located opposite the school building. George has a fine reputation as a workman and we bespeak for him a fair share of patronage.

Postmaster J. H. Underwood is rejoicing in the possession of an estimable better half now-a-days whom he found in the person of Mrs. Cloie Cole, of Rollin. The nuptial knot was tied by the Rev. B. T. Bailey, of the Baptist church of Rollin village, on Tuesday the 6th inst. The union is an especially fitting one and we wish them a hearty God speed in the new relation.

Miss Emma Rickey and Ann VanTine started for Clyde, Ohio, on the morning train Tuesday, at which place they will make a short stay and then move on to New York state where they will spend the remainder of the season. The ladies have been engaged in the dressmaking business here for a long time and their absence will be felt by a large number of friends.

THE COLLAPSE OF THE CONFEDERACY.

The Final Parting of Lee and his Generals After Appomattox.

We are permitted to publish the following incident from the pen of Capt. A. P. Foster, landlord of the Lilley House, who was an eye witness of the occurrence therein described. The day has now come when anything which throws light upon the history of the great struggle, whether on the federal or confederate side, is of public interest, and should be preserved.

Apropos of Appomattox, I give the following as a subject for poet or painter.

The parting between Washington and his generals has been celebrated in song and story, and the famous painting of that occurrence has in millions of copies become familiar to the people. But no singer has sung of the parting between General Robert E. Lee and his generals after Appomattox. No painter has painted it. Washington and his officers separated in the sunshine of glorious victory, the fruition of their brightest hopes. Lee and his officers separated in the gloom of defeat, the darkness of despair.

Amid the happy homes of their people, the shouts, and the banners and the merry music and rejoicing multitudes, Washington and his generals parted to go each one to his pleasant home.

Amid the ruins of their capitol, with bowed, bare heads, in utter silence and bitter tears, Lee and his generals went their several ways, to homes destroyed, families broken up and scattered and often into exile and oblivion.

The final parting was in front of Lee's mansion in Richmond two days after Appomattox. Lee's house is an ordinary square brick, standing alone on Franklin street, one square from the capitol. All the other houses on the square are connected.

Upon the afternoon of the second day after the surrender people in that vicinity were surprised to see come riding up the street from the south a company of confederate horsemen. They were unarmed. Their gray uniforms were worn, soiled and some tattered, their trappings old and patched. They wore slouched hats and here and there was a feather remaining of the once smart and jaunty and drooping plume of the confederate cavalryman. They were bronzed and browned and bearded. They sat erect and came on with the splendid horsemanship for which they were noted. Upon the collars of some of the gray jackets could still be seen the faded and tarnished gilt stars, the emblems of the wearers rank.

In front of them rode Lee. His two hands held the loosely swinging reins and rested upon the pommel. His head was bent, and his eyes were looking straight ahead from under his down cast brow, but they seemed to see nothing. As the troops captured up to his old home his horse stopped at the gate as if aroused from a reverie, suddenly, as if awakened from an abstraction, his eyes upon the familiar views and then around over the group of gallant soldiers who had followed his fortunes for four bloody years and gone down in defeat under his banner. The end of it all had come at last. He threw himself from his horse and all his companions followed his action. They stood hat in hand, with an arm through the bridle-rein, while Lee went from man to man, grasping each by the hand, looking intently into each face as though he would impress it upon his memory forever. Then he turned and walked through the gate up the steps to his door.

As a servant opened the door, he paused with his left foot on the verandah, his right upon the last step, and looked back for the last time. Not a word had been spoken. Not a good bye uttered. There was no sound heard but of sobs as these unkempt and grizzled heros of a hundred battles leaned their heads against the shoulders of their horses and wept. Lee gave one look and broke down at last. His hands went over his eyes, his frame shook with sobs, as he turned quickly and disappeared into his lonely house.

With the closing of that door behind him ended forever the wild dream of the Southern Confederacy.

LAST SAD RITES.

NEW YORK, August 10.—The closing day of the funeral services over the remains of [illegible] Grant dawned with a clear [illegible] and a cooling breeze. A [illegible] day for the solemn [illegible] marked the [illegible] tomb of all that is mortal of him whom the Nation mourns and will not be wished for. From the firing of the sunrise gun, the boom of the minute guns fired at the stated intervals by both the military and naval details was proclaiming to the people that the last sad rites were under way and, before the day closes, the hero of the Union will have been committed to the tomb. The tolling bells, the grand old ringing in mournful cadence, and their pealing added to the general feeling of sorrow everywhere displayed. Not in the history of New York has there been such universal mourning as on this occasion, nor has there been exhibited such widespread sympathy for the family, of which the Nation's dead was the head. The streets along the route and out for the passage of the funeral cortege was packed with people early in the morning, many of whom remained up all night for the purpose of securing or holding an advantageous position from which to view the solemn pageant.

The crowds were well behaved and the police arrangements so perfect that the military, Grand Army posts and other societies experienced but little difficulty in going to the places assigned them. The funeral cortege was the grandest and most imposing of its kind ever witnessed in this or any other country. Fully 100,000 men followed the body to the grave.

At precisely one o'clock Saturday morning the gates leading to the vestibule of the City Hall were closed and the crowds which had been passing in a steady stream received a sudden check. The line ceased moving and those in it heaved a sigh at their neighbors. When word was passed by the police detailed to keep those in line in order that no more would be admitted, thousands were disappointed and their countenances plainly reflected their chagrin.

The lines, at the time, extended clear around the park, and for some distance along Broadway and the adjacent streets. It is estimated that fully 50,000 viewed the remains while lying in state here. So hurriedly had they to pass that only a mere glance was allowed.

Immediately after the close of the gates the plaza was cleared and in a few minutes the police were in full possession guarding every approach, and allowing no one but the privileged to come within a stones throw of the building. The undertaker at once took charge. None but the police and guards and all-night reporters were present at the time.

"Any here who now desire to view the remains will step forward at once," said the undertaker, his voice echoing in the dark corridors.

All present passed by the casket and the lying in state of the ex-President had ended. Undertaker Merritt then brushed the glass plates above the body and drew from their places, the two lids. The four screws on each were turned down and the face of the dead had been closed forever from view, unless there shall, in the future, come a request to remove the lids.

In this final examination of the case the undertaker found a stain of tobacco juice upon the velvet covering. With indignant ejaculations it was removed. Then the dead was left in care of the guards, who stood erect and silent within the closed iron gates and beneath the black drapings.

The night wore on and the gray of dawn was creeping up the east. The still air of the tomb-like corridors became heavy with the perfume of withering flowers near the dead. A huge piece, "The Gates Ajar," had a place at the head of the casket and the sweet smell of lilies was borne down to those who stood and watched. Great horse shoes of red and yellow rosebuds added their fragrance and a cross and crown from Mayor Latrobe, of Baltimore, sent out its quota of heavy perfume that settled on the sepulchral air.

But there was one tribute that bore no fragrance except such as will come tenderly to the family of the dead. It bore no perfume save that which lives in its memories. This token was a plain wreath of oak leaves pinned together with stems and formed in the shape of a letter G. The oaks in the forests of Mt. McGregor had fluttered in the breezes while General Grant was dying, and on the afternoon of Thursday, the day he died, little Julia, his grand-daughter, and little Josie, Dr. Douglass' child, had gathered the oak leaves in the mountain woods. The children prattled and knit, with innocent fingers and loving hearts, the wreath of oak leaves that to-day is the only tribute that touched the General's casket. The little ones's offering being finished, they then took it Colonel Grant, whose eyes dimmed when his daughter said: "Papa, Josie and I have made this for Grandpa, and please won't you give it to him." The Colonel placed the oaken wreath on the casket; then it rested there in Albany and still remains as the children's offering.

Daylight was near. The strains of dirge music crept out on the morning air. At first distant, they grew nearer and nearer. The red deepened in the east. Sunrise was near. The strains of music, slow and sad, grew more distinct. Then blue-coated veterans of Meade Post, Philadelphia, 500 strong, came tramping to the dirge music of the trumpets. The east was suffused with tints of orange, and dawn was close—the dawn of the funeral day. The veterans entered the gates and marched past, while muffled drums timed their footsteps and funeral dirges floated out toward the sea. The chimes of [illegible] Church, tolled mournfully and the sound of [illegible] the great [illegible] and [illegible] notes. The day was born. The last day of the dead upon earth, before the dust should be consigned to sacrificing [illegible].

is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted without prejudice its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve, and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

A. L. HINCKLEY,
No. 264 Broadway, Lowell, Mass.

Disposition of the Most Valuable Mementoes of the Funeral Already Decided Upon.

The Funeral Car to Be Taken to Pieces—Floral Offerings Removed to the Tomb—The Family Returned to Mt. McGregor.

AFTER THE FUNERAL.

NEW YORK, August 11.—After the body of General Grant was removed from the funeral car on Saturday at the tomb, the car was taken back to the iron yard of J. B. & J. M. Connell, foot of West Twenty-sixth Street, where it has since remained. Yesterday it was determined, in order to effectually prevent the car from ultimately falling into the hands of unfeeling speculators, to break it up.

The funeral bill will be very heavy. The undertaker was employed jointly by the family of General Grant and the city of New York, but it is said that the entire bill will be paid by the city. The undertaker's bill alone will not be less that $20,000. Five hundred carriages were at the funeral. These were engaged for the day, and this part of the bill will be $5,000. The black horses that were attached to the funeral car were all carefully selected. There were twenty-four of these, and their drapings cost $250.

The disposition of some of the most valuable mementoes of the funeral has already been decided upon. The large American flag that was laid on the ice casket at Mt. McGregor will be retained by Colonel Grant. One of the flags that was on the funeral car will be given to U. S. Grant Post, G. A. R.; one to the Seventh Regiment and one to Mrs. Dr. Newman. There were four flags on the car, but the manner in which the other is to be disposed of has not yet been decided.

The effect of the presence of so many thousand strangers in the city was to greatly increase the business of the elevated roads and the various telegraph companies. On Friday the Western Union Telegraph Company handled 93,160 messages, it being the largest number ever sent and received in a single day. The elevated roads carried 400,078 passengers and the receipts aggregated $33,119.

Colonel Fred Grant and U. S. Grant, with their wives, and Mrs. Sartoris, who have been stopping at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, left yesterday for Mt. McGregor on the eleven o'clock train over the West Shore Road. Colonel Jesse Grant and his wife did not accompany the other members of the family. General Sherman started for home in the morning and General Sheridan left at night. General Fitz Hugh Lee is still at the St. James Hotel. Vice President Hendricks left last evening. The Vice President said that the funeral procession was a grand and imposing spectacle.

It was found necessary to keep a dozen policemen on duty at the City Hall yesterday, owing to the large number of persons who crowded into the building to view the catafalque and floral pieces, which stood in the vestibule. The officers had all they could do to prevent visitors from plucking either flowers or leaves from the floral tributes which they wanted as mementoes.

At ten o'clock Undertaker Merritt and his assistants arrived with two large covered wagons and began the work of removing the flowers to the tomb at Riverside. All the smaller pieces were removed first and placed in one wagon, and then the larger and grander ones were taken apart and packed in the other wagon. Any floral pieces whose size prevents their being placed in the tomb will be placed outside at the entrance.

A photograph was taken of the catafalque and flowers, copies of which will be given to the members of the Grant family. Every little leaf, or flower, or twig that fell as the floral pieces were being taken from the City Hall was eagerly snatched up by the spectators, the majority of whom were women or young girls. Even the moss on which the pieces rested was in demand, and before a half hour after the last piece had been taken away the floor looked as if it had been swept. The catafalque and the canopy were taken apart and carried to Merritt's establishment on Eighth Avenue where they will be placed on exhibition for some time.

The help at the City Hall have had a great deal of extra work for the past week, but not a cent of extra pay have they got. It is suggested that the female help should be given the making of at least one dress from the stuff used in the mourning drapery.

On the visitor's registers in the Governor's room appear the following names, comprising the party of the Grant family, who visited the City Hall Sunday night: F. D. Grant, Alexander Sharp, U. S. A.; W. H. Monroe, Jr., N. Y.; Julia Grant, Nellie G. Sartoris, London; Ida Honore Grant, Lockwood House; Bertha Honore Palmer, Chicago; Annie B. Dent.

The names were written by each of the signers in person. Mayor Grace will send a message to the Board of Aldermen this evening, calling their attention to the admirable manner in which the funeral arrangements were carried out by all the city departments, and suggesting the passage of appropriate resolutions.

Last week Frederick Law Olmstead, the landscape engineer who was detailed to select a site for General Grant's monument, wrote a letter to Park President Cummings in which he expressed the opinion that the site chosen for the Grant tomb and proposed monument in Riverside Park was not a suitable one. It would be extremely unfortunate, he thought, if the remains of the dead hero were brought into close association with the gayety of the promenade, or if the city adopted plans for the terminal arrangements of the promenade which would destroy its main character, or which will prevent the promenade from having the great northern view as its terminus.

The letter has caused a great deal of discussion and Mr. Calvert Vaux, the landscape gardener of the Central Park, has replied to it at length. He says that there is nothing in the most of Mr. Olmstead's objections. He favors erecting the monument and final tomb on the southern portion of what is called "The Loop," and then it would be practically out of the park, with a public road all around it. Small pathways leading to it for foot-passengers could also be made and the view from the drive and park would be in no way impaired.

Mayor Grace said yesterday: "The actual site of the monument, or what sort of a monument it will be, has not yet been decided upon. I do not think a better site could possibly have been chosen than the one near the temporary tomb, and there is plenty of room there for a very large monument without, in the least, obstructing the view or in any way destroying the beauty of the spot. I shall certainly take no action in premises. The whole matter will be referred to Mr. Vaux and Superintendent Parsons, and they will report to the Park Commissioners as to the best site for the proposed monument."

It was said at the office of the Park Commissioners that the plan of laying out the northern part of Riverside Park had been modified to correspond to a great extent with the views of Mr. Olmstead. At first it was intended to have the permanent monument at a point about two hundred feet north of the tomb, but it will now be placed directly back of and near the tomb.

The Claremont House will remain and the handsome bluff will be reserved for those who visit for recreation.

From One Hundred and Twenty-first Street to One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street in the park will be set apart exclusively for the burial ground of General Grant and a roadway will be laid out north of the tomb on a line with One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street so as to separate the burial ground from the other portions of the park.

The Park Commissioners have determined to secure the land lying east of Riverside Park extending to Claremont Avenue on one side, and from One Hundred and Twenty-second to One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Street. As soon as the Commissioners have secured a title to these grounds they will be laid out to correspond with the grounds in the vicinity of the tomb, and thus the necessary quiet will be secured to the spot in which the General's remains are deposited.

The key of the vault is kept in the large safe in the Park Commissioners' office.

General Fitzhugh Lee was shown a newspaper yesterday containing the interview with Robert Toombs in which that gentleman says that Jeff Davis ruined the Southern cause by letting West Point men control the policy of the Confederacy. General Lee expressed surprise and then indignation. "There was scarcely a soldier of renown on either side who was not a West Point graduate," he exclaimed. "Toombs contradicts himself by saying West Point ideas of martinet discipline throttled the South and then going on to say that Albert Sidney Johnston or Joe Johnston could have saved the Confederacy. Both these gentlemen were West Point men. Among the famous Southern soldiers educated at West Point were: R. E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Joseph E. Johnston, Albert Sidney Johnston, Beauregard, McPherson and Jeb Stewart. Gordon, of Georgia, and N. B. Forrest were almost the only able Southern soldiers who did not owe their military education to the school on the Hudson."

"How about Toombs having been offered the Confederate Presidency, as he states?"

"I never heard anything of it, and I do not know who could have tendered Toombs the Presidency. As I remember it, Jefferson Davis and Toombs were the candidates in 1861, and Davis was elected. We elected Jefferson Davis because he was able and pure; two essential qualities in statesmanship and private life, and we believed that his military education would be of great value to a President of a nation just plunging into a war of independence."

"What did you think of the funeral of General Grant?"

"I was much pleased to be thus assured that all unfriendly feeling has passed away and that there is so much evidence of good feeling and of the reuniting of both sections of our great country. I think the great friendliness evinced for General Grant was because of his past language and because of his conduct, more particularly at the surrender at Appomattox Court House."

ST. LOUIS TRUNK MYSTERY.

Maxwell, the Supposed Murderer, Brought from New Zealand.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 11.—Maxwell, the supposed murderer of Preller, at the Southern Hotel in St. Louis, arrived here yesterday from New Zealand in charge of St. Louis detectives, on the steamship Zealandia. He was taken to the city prison. Maxwell was quiet on the voyage and caused the detectives no trouble. He looks pale because he was kept in his stateroom most of the time. When questioned on reaching shore he said he was a Parisian and that his name was Daguiere. It mattered nothing that he had been known under different names. Many other men went by other names than their own. He said he had known C. Arthur Preller, but beyond this he would say nothing that touched upon his alleged offense.

To all questions he simply replied that he had been advised by counsel to say nothing. He said he was surprised on being arrested. He had gone to New Zealand partly for pleasure. After a few weeks sojourn he was to have gone to Melbourne and Sydney. When the reporter told him it was said he had been a clergyman he smiled and remarked that he did not feel like one and did not think he looked like one. He would say nothing as to his line of defense and when told that the insurance companies claimed to doubt Preller's death he was silent and his expression did not change. The detectives say Maxwell was perfectly calm in court in New Zealand and made no defense to the testimony offered by them as to the murder.

The Molders' Strike Ended.

ROCHESTER, August 11.—The strike of the molders which has been going on for the past four months is ended at last. The arbitrators have rendered the decision which is accepted without protestation on either side. Following are the findings of their report: The first finding is that wages are not to be reduced; the second finding is that the strikers and discharged apprentices are to be re-employed as soon as possible, and that no other men be employed until all the former strikers are at work; the third finding is, that as the right of corporations to transact business through their officers and committees have been recognized by law, therefore, the newly appointed representative on either side should endeavor to treat each other with respect and consideration; the fourth finding is that heavy tools shall be charged to them, and if worn when returned shall be credited back, but if improperly damaged the men in charge shall pay for them.

Tailors' National Union.

BALTIMORE, August 11.—The Tailors' National Union of the United States met in annual convention at Mechanics' Hall yesterday morning, with John B. Lewmen, of Denver, President, in the chair, and Joseph Wilkinson, of New York, Secretary. The members accepted an invitation to attend a picnic at Scheutzen Park under the auspices of the local union. One of the important questions to be deliberated upon is whether or not the Union will support the strikes ordered by the Federation of Trades by a per capita levy.

DETROIT, Mich., August 11.—The biennial meeting of the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters of the United States, is now being held in this city. There are fully 5,000 persons in and about the city who have come to the meeting. Last night there was a torchlight procession, promenade concert and dance. The business sessions will begin to-day.

POOR GIRLS.—The poorest girls in the world are those who have never been taught to work. There are thousands of them. Rich parents have petted them, they have been taught to despise labor, and depend upon others for a living, and are perfectly helpless. If misfortune comes upon their friends, as it often does, their case is hopeless. The most forlorn and miserable women upon earth belong to this class. It belongs to parents to protect their daughters from this deplorable condition. They do them a great wrong if they neglect it. Every daughter should be taught to earn her own living. The rich as well as the poor require this training. The wheel of fortune rolls swiftly around; the rich are very likely to become poor, and the poor rich. Skill to labor is no disadvantage to the rich, and as indispensable to the poor. Well-to-do parents must educate their daughters to work; no reform is more imperative than this.

After using three bottles, found myself once more a man, completely restored to health, with a hearty appetite and a gain in flesh of 48lbs. Call at C. A. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

THE GIANTS' CAUSEWAY.—The Giants' Causeway is in the County Antrim, on the northeast coast of Ireland, between Benmore Head and Port Rush. For nine or eight miles along that coast there are cliffs of basalt, many of which are made up in great part of rude vertical columns, which alternate with layers of amorphous beds of the same class of rocks, and ranges of these in places reach the height of 400 or 500 feet. When these are viewed in front from the sea they suggest rude resemblances to architectural forms. The name of Giants' Causeway is often applied to the whole coast range, although it is properly applicable to but a small portion of it. It is a platform of basalt, composed of closely arranged columns, ranging from 15 to 36 feet in height, and it extends from a steep cliff down into the sea, till it is lost below low-water mark. Its length exposed at low-water is about 600 feet, and it is divided into three portions, called the Little, Middle, and Large or Grand Causeway.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

Purify your blood, tone up the system, and regulare the digestive organs by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists.

THE MODEST FATHER.—"Father," began a young Detroiter the other evening, "were you in the war?"

"Yes, my son."

"Was it awful?"

"Yes."

"Lots of dead and wounded men?"

"Yes."

"Did you kill many?"

"Well, I shouldn't like to answer that question."

"Are you very modest, pa?"

"I hope I am too modest to brag."

"That was what Mr. Smith meant, then, when he was telling the men down at the drug store that you hadn't any war record to brag of."

"He did, eh? Smith is a liar!"

"That's what I thought. He told the men that you run so fast he couldn't catch you on horseback, and any boy knows that a horse can catch a man with a stiff knee."

"A life on the ocean wave and a home on the rolling deep," it is all very well to sing about in poetic verse, but the poor sailors are subject to discomforts that we landsmen know nothing of. Jacob Palmer, mate on the U. S. S. Portland, writes that he never starts on a cruise without laying in a supply of Mishler's Herb Bitters. It is invaluable for diarrhoea, dysentery, colic, cramp, and all similar disease.

A little dot of a girl coaxed two nickel from her father on Thanksgiving day, saying she would use one for candy and the other she would give to the missionaries. Before executing her expressed intentions she lost one while at play, and running to her mamma, said: "Oh, mamma, I have lost my missionary nickel."

DUST TO DUST

The funeral of Gen. Grant took place last Saturday, on which day his mortal remains were conveyed to their final resting place. The largest and most imposing funeral pageant which the history records was that the cortege which bore it has passed first from the City Hall in New York along the grandest thoroughfare in America to Riverside Park, where the final earth was cast. And in all the principal cities of the Union special services were held and fitting addresses were delivered in honor of the great soldier. The entire nation was in mourning on that day for the illustrious dead.

But little can be added now in commemoration of the departed hero. "No words of sorrow have been left unsaid, no language of eulogy has been unexpressed, no emblem of mourning has been unused to paint upon the public canvass the achievements of General Grant. Even the world hushed its breath and suspended for a time its business cares and traffic to do honor to the distinguished soldier. The north and south struck hands "across the bloody chasm" and joined in sentiments of respect for the great commander who has gone to the eternal camping ground. Gen. Buckner, who surrendered to Grant at Donelson, and Gen. Joe Johnson, who made the final surrender of the confederacy, marched by the side of Sherman and Sheridan among the pall bearers. The victors and the vanquished mingled their tears over his ashes, and bore his corpse to the tomb.

The people followed his body to the grave, not as they would follow a conquering hero like Napoleon, or a military genius like Alexander, with admiration and awe, but they mourned for Grant, as for a patriot fallen, with a sincere and heartfelt sorrow. He was a man of the people and the people had marched to love him. He only drew his sword reluctantly to battle for a great principle, and gladly sheathed it again when his work was done.

The selection of his burial place was a happy one. Grant's remains belong to no state but to the nation, and it was befitting that in the nation's great capital his tomb should be placed. New York is and always will be the American Metropolis. Here a mausoleum will be erected, and visitors will make pilgrimages to the tomb of Grant during all the future years of the Republic. In beautiful River side, with the murmers of the Hudson breaking gently beneath him, and the great trees lovingly bending over him, his ashes will sleep. "Let us have peace," were the words of the great commander, and peace has come to his dust at last.

Nearly a hundred years ago New England began to stream out to the Western Reserve, and founded its first colony at Marietta, Ohio. It is proposed to celebrate the event by a centennial in 1888. Meanwhile HARPER'S MAGAZINE takes time by the forelock and will give in the September issue a paper on "The Earliest Settlement in Ohio," with numerous portraits of the pioneers and pictures of old houses.

Steals Be Investigated

When Congress convenes this business should be investigated. The country would like to know exactly by what means a little ring of capitalists secured leases to nearly 4,000,000 acres of Indian lands. The Indians had no right to lease these lands, and yet it appears that they leased them through the persuasion of the Indian agents, the very men whose duty it was to protect these untutored sons of the forest against the greed of the white man.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Ideal Cabinet Officer

Secretary Whitney is the ideal Cabinet officer. He has youth with all its vigor and elan; he has experience with its wisdom; he has industry with its propelling power. He is courteous to everybody, never peevish or prostrated by overwork, though always busy, not rendered vainglorious by his position, but approachable by all. There is a wholesome and refreshing air surrounding him. He is zealous without ostentation, busy without fuss, efficient without parade. He is a distinct and conspicuous success.—Washington Post.

The People's Choice.

Already the question comes up, Who shall be chosen orator to pronounce the eulogy of eulogies upon our deceased citizen? And it is a part of the victory that the great soldier wins in his death that everywhere, regardless of party divisions and old-time personal and political dissensions, there is springing up a demand that Roscoe Conkling, of New York, shall fill the orator's place. Of Mr. Conkling's ability as an American orator there can be no question. Neither can any one doubt his fitting in intimacy and cordial friendship with the nation's hero.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Official Salaries at the Hub.

We notice an occasional expression of surprise in some of our esteemed contemporaries that the Governor of Massachusetts should get only half as large pay as the Mayor of Boston gets. The really surprising thing is that the Mayor of Boston should get only twice the salary of the Governor of Massachusetts. Surely, in the estimation of the people, their town is of more than twice the importance of the State. If the salary of the Governor should be doubled, the Boston folks would probably want to double or treble the salary of their Mayor, so that their sense of proportion might be appeased and comforted.—New York Sun.

A Good Thing All Round.

The President begins his vacation to-day. If he can succeed in burying himself so deep in the Adirondack forests that the office seekers can't find him or send word to him his proposed month's vacation will doubtless prove of great advantage. The present incumbents whose official heads have not been called for will also have a respite from the terrible suspense which has been torturing them for months. No more removals till September is understood to be the present policy of the administration and the official heads will be able to go to sleep at night without a dread of awaking in the morning to find themselves decapitated. As the office seekers will have to rest whether they want to or not the Presidential vacation would seem to be a a good thing all round.—Philadelphia Times.

Not to be Bulled.

One thing has been very clearly demonstrated by the present administration, though it has taken a good deal of talking and some pretty stern words to bring the parties most interested to understand the situation fully. The President and his Cabinet are not to be bulled. Every step that they have taken toward the breaking up of old abuses has been resisted by powerful interests and shrewd pleaders. Efforts have been made to prejudice the people and at the same time to shake the determination of the executive, but happily all have failed. No backward step has been taken. In this may be seen an evidence of strength of character and sincerity of purpose on the part of Mr. Cleveland and his associates which will have a happy effect in giving them public confidence and esteem.—Chicago Herald.

SEYMOUR'S TRIBUTE TO GEN. GRANT.

The venerable statesman, Horatio Seymour, having been invited to speak at a memorial meeting in Utica, sent the following letter of tribute to the great General's memory.

"CAZENOVIA, Aug. 6, 1885.

"DEAR SIR: I am sorry my absence from home puts it out of my power to attend and address the meeting of the citizens of Utica to express their sentiments with regard to the character and services of Gen. Grant. I enjoyed a pleasant intercourse with him and held him in high regard. In addition to his distinguished military services, he had other claims upon the gratitude of his countrymen. Throughout his brilliant career he preserved the simplicity of habits and sentiments which is ever characteristic of greatness. He was never bewildered by his great achievements or overcome by his brilliant success. He will live in the history of his country not only on account of his deeds on battlefields, but also for his thoughtful utterances and his kindly words with regard to all sections of our land. He served his country as well upon his death bed as on the fields of war. His words will do much to do away with hurtful passions and prejudices and to strengthen the bonds of our Union. There has never been an exhibition of popular feeling which gives us more confidence in the future of our Union than the expressions with regard to the death of Gen. Grant in all sections of the land and by the members of all parties. To all thoughtful citizens this exhibition of general regard and respect does much to encourage the hope that sectional passions and prejudices are dying out. His words at the close of his life have done much to bring about this happy change of feeling and sentiment.

Respectfully yours, etc.

"HORATIO SEYMOUR."

THE WORLD'S PEDESTAL FUND.

The self-imposed task of the New York World newspaper, to raise a fund of $100,000 to complete the pedestal for the celebrated Bartholdi Statue of Liberty, has been completed. It is the most successful undertaking of a public character accomplished by private enterprise that this country has seen. Long may the World prosper and reap the fruits of its enterprise. The subscription has been running 147 days; average receipts per day, $6,90. The highest amount received from any one source was $2,800 from the Brighton Beach races benefit, and the largest receipts on any one day were $3,525, recieved June 21. Only two individuals have given as much as $1,000, Pierre Lorillard and Joseph Pulitzer, editor of the World. The next largest sum to come from a single family was $600 given by Hon. R. P. Flower, his wife and two children. About thirty men have given $250 each and a half dozen individuals have given $100 each. Only about $30,000 of the $100,000 was collected in sums of $100 or more. Very few contributions have been in sums of $25 or $50, none to speak of in sums of $10 even. Fully $80,000 has been collected in sums of less than $1. The grand total foots up $102,006.39, contributed by 120,000 persons.

As it was Written," a novel in the press of Messrs. Cassell & Company, is, it is believed, destined to make no ordinary impression. The author, Sydney Luska, is a young New Yorker, and his story is one of the Jewish race. It is not a story in defence of a creed, but it is simply a story told for a story's sake. The proof sheets of the book have been read by two literary gentlemen of rare judgment, both of whom give it high praise for literary style and originality of plot.

TWO LETTERS WORTH READING

The following correspondence [illegible] explains itself. The popular belief is that President Cleveland wears a good [illegible] of socks to be true and [illegible] now true that he wears [illegible] socks or not [illegible]

President Cleveland [illegible] received a letter [illegible] which he [illegible] the writer says:

[illegible] read the [illegible] agent of [illegible] with [illegible] of hot water [illegible] Nobs were more astonished than those who had signed his petition [illegible] that my [illegible] I have received [illegible] parties who I know to be good men, but I suppose they [illegible] would never be [illegible] and but for the [illegible] the appointment was possible. It was stated by many gentlemen such who hated to refuse, and hoped that the official would resign [illegible]

To this the president replied:

WASHINGTON, August, 1885.—DEAR SIR:—I have read your letter with amazement and indignation. There is but one mitigation to the perfidy which your letter discloses, and that is found in the fact that you confess your share in it. I do not know whether you are a democrat or not, but if you are the crime which you confess is more unpardonable. The idea that this administration, pledged to give the people a better government and better officers, and engaged in a hand to hand fight with the bad elements of both parties, should be betrayed by those who ought to be worthy of implicit trust, is atrocious, and such treason to the people and to the party ought to be punished by imprisonment. Your confession comes too late to be of any immediate use to the public service, and I can only say that, while this is not the first time I have been deceived and misled by lying and treacherous representations, you are the first one that has so frankly owned his grievous fault. If any comfort is to be extracted from this assurance, you are welcome to it.

Yours truly,
GROVER CLEVELAND.

Before and After Taking.

The Free Press last October contained an interesting account of a meeting at the Russell House between Postmasters E. O. Shaw, of Newaygo, and John Cole, of Fremont. Republicans of course and Daniel E. Soper, of Newaygo (very much Democrat.) In the account occurred this passage.

"The three fell into a very heated discussion of the recent political meetings in Newaygo County, the size of Blaine and Cleveland poles erected in a score of different cross roads, in the midst of which they all moved down Woodward avenue, the two ponderous statesmen on either side of the diminutive one and talking him into an early grave. The last words heard as the echoes of the shaking pavement died away were

"Oh, well, you fellows can talk. You were both born in mail bags and think the party

"And you can just bet we are going to stay in the mail bags a great many years longer."

Time works in a mysterious way its wonders, etc. Postmaster Shaw was kicked out of the mail bags yesterday and the protesting Daniel E. Soper was carefully inserted therein in his stead by the Postmaster-General.—Detroit Free Press.

Dan's old Tecumseh acquaintances will congratulate him on his good fortune. He has got there and he deserved it.

The Knights of the Key-board, otherwise the Commercial Telegraph Co., held their annual picnic at Sand lake last Thursday. There was a goodly attendance and the participants had a fine days recreation until the rain came on. The day closed with a bountiful supply of liquid refreshments not announced on the regular program. The toasts were drowned out. A few venturesome ones returned that evening. The others didn't.

The report has gained circulation that the School Board would recommend at the annual school meeting the erection of a new building in the west ward, to cost about $10,000. We have made some enquiry and find that no member of the board is in favor of expending that amount for any such purpose. It is true that additional facilities are needed in the west branch building and the matter will undoubtedly be presented at the annual meeting for action. What recommendation, if any, the Board will make, is still undecided.

The excellent music given the G. A. R. boys last summer at their picnic at Devils Lake, was so well appreciated that the committee this year have again engaged the I. O. O. F. band of this village to furnish music for the encampment to be held at the same place Aug. 26, 27 and 28th. Other bands were anxious for the engagement, but the committee decided to give our boys the preference, and did so in spite of the fact that their bid was much higher than those of other bands. The boys will go better prepared than ever.—Blissfield Advance.

The band concert last Monday evening was a good one. Several selections were finely rendered. We regret that a few rowdies took it upon themselves to interfere with the exercises. If the experiment should be repeated, somebody may feel the legal halter draw.

Several Tecumseh people went to Sand Lake last Thursday. It was a fine trip out in the morning, but the return ride was quite the reverse. The extra amount of damp moisture induced many of them to remain over night.

The editor of the Hudson Gazette offers his office shears for the use of the new administration. We respectfully admonish Bro. Schemerhorn not to be too hasty. If he parts with his shears, where will the copy for the printer come from, and in these hard times, where will the money come from to buy a new pair.

The first promissory note drawn in Monroe was between two Frenchmen, and read something like the following. The Sunday School picnic yesterday to Devils lake was largely attended. Over six hundred tickets were sold. Five passenger coaches and two box cars were packed full of humanity and provision baskets. The Masons are preparing for a big time on their excursion to Devils Lake which will come off on Tuesday next, Aug. 18th. The Lodges of Manchester, Clinton, Dundee and Tecumseh will participate. The train will leave the Tecumseh station promptly at eight o'clock and will return about nine o'clock in the evening in time to allow the Clinton and Manchester brethren to go home on the late train on the Jackson Branch. From present indications the party will number at least five hundred. The excursion will be under the control of the Masonic fraternity but will be free to all who may wish to attend.

A VISIT FROM AN OLD VETERAN.

Mr. E. H. Custer, the venerable father of the late Gen. Geo. A. Custer, who lives at Monroe, is spending a few days with Lieut. Eliot Gray. Mr. Custer came down to the village Monday and paid his respects at the HERALD office, during which interval we enjoyed a pleasant chat with him. Mr. Custer was 78 years old the 10th day of December last, and although he has been living for eight years upon borrowed time, he is still as hale and hearty as most men of three score. He was born in Maryland. Left that state when eighteen and traveled on foot with a pack on his back to Harrison Co., Ohio. Here he found an attraction in the shape of a pretty girl became a married man, and lived there several years. Thirty six years ago he came to Michigan, but on account of sickness in his family returned to Ohio after a few months. In 1863 he moved back to Monroe and has lived there ever since. He has been a life long Democrat of the Andrew Jackson stamp, and is a warm admirer of President Cleveland. He has had three sons, one son in-law and one grandson killed in the U. S. service, either in the rebellion, or in the Indian wars since. He has been spending about a week at Lieut. Gray's and will return home Friday.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS

The Morenci fair will be held this year the last week in Sept.

John Brazee's new hotel at Devils lake will be called the Stony Grove House.

The Adrian canning company are now at work on beans. This is their bean season.

The Adrian scientific society has raised $7.00 toward buying weather signal flags.

Tecumseh leads all the schools in the county in the sum received for non resident tuitions.

The Clinton Woolen Mills are turning out some fine new cloths. These goods are better than ever before.

Adrian was overrun with school ma'ams last Saturday. The county examiners held a matinee on that day.

Adrian wants a cremation society. We should suppose the citizens of that lively city would get all the fire they wanted after death, with the old fashioned method of burial.

The whole number of postmasters in the classes appointed by the president is 2,233. The whole number in the classes appointed by the Postmaster General is 51,000. President Cleveland has already appointed 450, and Postmaster-General Vilas 3,500.

Elaborate memorial exercises were held at Adrian last Saturday. A procession marched through the principal streets to the park, where a lengthy program was presented, consisting of vocal music and addresses by Ex Gov. Croswell, Gen. Wm. Humphrey and Lieut. Salsbury.

The Daisy Road Cart which Carter will place on exhibition at the San Francisco Cal. Fair, is a thing of beauty, and no mistake. It is finished in the natural wood, elegantly trimmed, and the hubs mounted with gold bands. If it doesn't captivate the inhabitants out there it will be a wonder.—Hudson Gazette.

Last Monday evening at a meeting of Adrian Lodge No. 8, I. O. O. F., Past Grand G. W. Westerman in behalf of the lodge presented an elegant gold headed cane to Past Grand Master and Past Grand Patriarch, C. W. Hunt, of Cleveland, Ohio, and for many years a resident of this city. Mr. Hunt has been a member of the order for forty years.—Adrian Press.

The leader of the salvation choir purchases a copy of the Record each evening. His voice, it is true, is like the voice of the threshing machine; but his judgement in selecting a newspaper is as clear as a squirt-gun. As to his sing, if he can trade it off for "40 acres and a mule" we advise him to let 'er slide. The mule, under such circumstances, would be cordially welcomed in Adrian.—Evening Record.

The Hillsdale Leader and Standard propose to put up $100 each, for the temperance cause. Well we've heard of prosperity in the profession before—aye, even of brother publishers who have been able to pay cash down for sponges, benzine and other necessaries about the office, but such opulence as this—two editors with $100 each—has never been our pleasure to see before, in fact we haven't seen this yet. We trust this betokens the dawning of that brighter day, when an editor will be able to receive friendly visits from a burgler without being compelled to rob him before he gets out.—Hudson Gazette.

Mr. J. W. Heine, Sr., saw active service in the Canadian rebellion in 1838. He first went out with an Ann Arbor company in November, 1837, and returning, went back again with a company from Adrian in the fall of 1838. The company that went from this city was composed of about forty men, only a dozen of whom were residents of the city, the rest were Canadian refugees. The Canadian authorities quickly crushed the rebellion, seizing and hanging every officer of the regiment above the rank of Mr. Heine, who was a lieutenant. Mr. Heine escaped, and a reward of £250 was offered for his head. That head is sound and whole and well fixed upon an active body to this day. Sydney Barbour came the nearest of the Adrian contingent to being hung. He was actually sentenced, but was afterward released on account of his age and mother's tears.—Evening Record.

At the late races the preponderance of the number of onlookers of gentlemen is appalling if we may credit the horrible story related by a lady who has just returned from Sand lake. She asserts with all the candor, that in her party there was just one lone bachelor, and they kept him chained up all the while to prevent other fair resorters from getting him away from them. The practice of some of the native gentlemen of devoting themselves to imported attractions to the relegation of the home water lilies right in the face of this masculine famine, also comes in for its share of denunciation. If possible, we shall try to spare a paper from this office for a few days, and send him over to Sand lake.—The Record.

That a handsome and talented bachelor like Bro. Benkes should wilfully and with malice aforethought relinquish an opportunity of this kind is almost beyond our belief. "Spare a hand!" Why, young man, go to the lake thyself and spend a week or ten days, and let the fair damsels chain up an editor—if they dare.

The twenty-second annual reunion of the students and teachers of the Raisin Valley Seminary will be held on the Seminary grounds to-morrow, Aug. 14th. Picnic dinner in the grove. Marianna Brown, formerly associate teacher is expected to be present. Orator, Celia Jones. Poetess, Anna Bartlett.

Scientific Notes.

The human body is seven-eighths water. The blood is mostly water. All the tissues owe their softness to it, and even the bones have a share of this fluid. No organ of the body could perform its duty, nor could life be sustained without it. Alcohol burns up the water, diseases and destroys the body.

An iron rail properly made, it is said, will last as long as those of steel. The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton road near Dayton has in use iron rails placed there thirty-one years ago which are yet in fair condition. They were made at Johnston, Pa., and the order required that they should be the best possible to be made. It is safe to say that no iron rails are made now-adays which would endure an equal amount of traffic for thirty years.

Denmark has lately acquired a torpedo-boat which is pronounced in England, where it was made, the largest afloat. Her displacement is fifty-five tons and her armament comprises four of the largest Whitehead torpedoes, each carrying eighty pounds of gun-cotton and a Hotchkiss revolving gun. She has a coal capacity of ten tons, which is equivalent to 1200 miles at eleven knots, but her full speed is twenty knots. Despite her great size, the boat is capable of transportation by rail.

In a paper read before the British Medical Association, Dr. J. Hadden objects to the treatment of fevers by immersing the patient in cold baths for the purpose of directly abstracting heat. He says the theory upon which such treatment is advocated is incorrect. The high temperature is not itself the cause of the worst symptoms of fevers. Furthermore he declares that in practice such treatment is dangerous, and that the only safe way of using baths in fevers is by sponging the surface with moderately cold water. Even tepid or warm water will exert a cooling and soothing effect. The immersion method is too shocking.

Professor Donders, long known as the most distinguished oculist in Holland, recently delivered a lecture in Amsterdam, on color, which has been widely quoted. After an elaborate experimental analysis of various popular notions on the subject in hand, Professor Donders proceeded to demonstrate that, notwithstanding the prevailing theory, green must be ranked with the primitive colors, like red, blue, and yellow. Green, the Professor explained could not be produced by mixing pure yellow and blue—such a composition would be white, in the very nature of things. The green color which is apparently derived from the mixture or amalgamation of two paints is, in reality, says Professor Donders, the result of "subtraction."

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kansas, writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by C. A. Wright & Co.

A Regular "D. B."

Not long ago a well-known newspaper man took day board at the Sherman House, says the Chicago Times. He was at home in the place, and was a privileged character. One day he sauntered behind the office counter into the regions that are supposed to be sacred to gentlemen who wear diamonds and address congressmen, governors, tourists, porters, newsboys and other statesmen by their first names, when his eye happened to catch sight of his own name on a slip with others over the bookkeeper's desk. He would not have given it a passing thought had not the letters "D. B." been attached. He "flew off the handle" on the instant, and demanded an interview with the proprietor. That august functionary was found, and to him the irate journalist addressed a few remarks. "Do I owe you anything?" he asked. "No, sir, was the prompt reply. "I have paid my bills all right so far as you know, haven't I?" "Certainly. I have no complaint to make."

"Then why do you permit your clerk to post me over his desk as a 'D. B.?'"

"I do not; there must be some mistake."

The journalist assured him that there was no mistake, and that he had seen the objectionable and significant letters with his own eyes. The more he thought of it the madder he got. The proprietor could not pacify him until he promised to have the matter investigated and the guilty man punished. It was found that the night clerk had perpetrated the outrage, and that evening the injured citizen took an early opportunity to take him to task. "What did you mean by putting 'D. B.' after my name?" inquired the newspaper man. "O, go away," he replied, thinking his interlocutor was "chaffing," as was his custom "don't bother me." "No, I won't go away, and I demand a civil answer to my question."

The clerk looked up and saw an angry man in front of him. Then his countenance was suddenly bisected by a grin, and he doubled up like a man with the colic. "You took day-board, didn't you?" he inquired, as soon as he regained his composure. "Yes, I did, and I have paid for all the day-board I have enjoyed." "So you have," was the soothing response, "but just come around here a minute, till I show you something. You see you are in good company. You are an associate of several millionaires and railroad magnates. They are each and every one designated the same way, 'D. B.' That is short for 'day-board.' Regular boarders are marked 'R. B.'"

The journalist spent a week's salary trying to bribe his audience with liquid nourishment to keep still, but like all good things the joke leaked.

Tired Languid Dull

Exactly expresses the condition of thousands of people at this season. The depressive effects of warm weather, and the week condition of the body can only be corrected by the use of a reliable tonic and blood purifier like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Why suffer longer when a remedy is so close at hand? Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will give you untold wealth in health, strength and energy.

The Curfew Bell.

It will be remembered that the curfew is commonly said to have been introduced into England by William the Conqueror. By that monarch it was ordained, under severe penalties that when the curfew bell rang at 8 o'clock in the evening all lights and fires should be extinguished. There are those who hold that this was merely the enforcing of an existing and very common police regulation to that effect. The absolute prohibition of lights after the ringing of the curfew bell was abolished by Henry I. in the year 1100, but the practice of tolling a bell at a fixed hour in the evening was continued, and this, which is still extant in some places, is a survival of the curfew of mediæval times. At first the common hour was 7 o'clock, then it was gradually advanced to 8, and in some places, to 9 o'clock; indeed, in Scotland, 10 o'clock was not an unusual hour. The curfew was a regulation most useful in those early days, when it was the custom to place the fire in a hole in the middle of the floor under an opening in the roof, to allow the escape of the smoke. When the family retired for the night, the fire was extinguished by covering it up; hence the term couvrefeu, or curfew. The regulation was also serviceable in obliging the people to keep in their houses, and thus preventing night brawls in the streets. It is believed that there is no historical authority for the popular tradition that the severity exhibited by the Conqueror in enforcing obedience to the curfew was more particularly designed to prevent the English from assembling in secret to plan schemes of rebellion against their Norman lords.

Charles Lamb was once called upon to say grace. "Is there no minister present?" "No," was the answer. "Then let us thank God," replied the humorist.

French merchants are more frank in their dealings than those of any other nation.—[Yonkers Gazette. Yes, but American merchants have more cents.—[Bloomington Eye.

"Once upon a time" a man met an old woman in an English town driving several asses. "Adieu, mother of asses," said he., "Adieu, my son,' was the old woman's reply.

Without wishing to encourage the world to gabble, we may state the goldenness of silence is over-estimated. The mute, inglorious oyster is always getting into broils, stews and hot water.

Breaking an awkward silence—Mrs. Montague Smart (suddenly, to bashful youth, who has not opened his lips since he was introduced to her a quarter of an hour ago.)—"And now let us talk of something else!"

Propriety—Light-minded young thing in a bathing suit: "Surely, Aunt Margaret, you're not going to wear your spectacles into the water!" Aunt M.: "Indeed I am. Nothing shall induce me to take off another thing."

A London tourist met a young woman going to the kirk, and, as was not unusual she was carrying her boots in her hand, trudging along barefoot. "My girl," he said, "is it customary for all the people in these parts to go barefoot?" "Pairtly they do,' and pairtly they mind their own business!"

A female applicant for aid, appeared at the office of the Director of the Poor, in Detroit the other day, with a sad and anxious look, and on being asked what she wanted replied, "I'd like some money.' "How much?" "Well, I can't say exactly. How much do you generally give to a person who wants to buy a bead belt?"

Health, Wealth and Happiness

Are more intimately connected with a sound stomach and good condition of the blood than most people suppose. Thin blood means a weakness, languor and misery. A dyspeptic stomach means all the horrors you can think of. Brown's Iron Bitters enrich blood, good digestion, healthy appetite, sweet sleep and vigorous strength. Mr. Henry Haliam, South 17th street, St. Louis, says, "Brown's Iron Bitters relieved me of dyspepsia, purified my blood, and gave me an appetite." Thousands of others testify in the same way.

A Pretty Story.

"I believe in a providence," said Victor Hugo to a company gathered around him in the Rue de Clichy, "because I am a providence myself." Being asked for an explanation, the poet repled: "We caught a mouse yesterday, evening. His death sentence was already pronounced, when my little granddaughter, Jeanne, with eyes glistening with tears, begged for the life of the gray prisoner. Her mother hesitated whether to listen to the dear little advocate or not, and in her doubt said, 'Grandfather shall decide.' So they came to me. For a moment I held the power of life and death over the diminutive creature, and I thought: The heavenly providence may find itself in my situation when the fate of a being of a higher order is to be determined. Naturally I set the mouse free; for when a man undertakes the role of providence on a small scale, he should at least imitate generosity."

THE ORCHARD.

How It Should Be Located and How the Land Should Be Prepared.

When considering where to locate an orchard one should always bear in mind that this is to be one of the permanent improvements of the farm, and much care and good judgment should be exercised in selecting a suitable location. The fitness of a location will depend on different considerations. The first point to consider is character and quality of the soil, and the way the land lays. Any soil that will produce good general farm crops will grow a good orchard. The soil should be as deep as possible, having a goodly portion of decayed vegetable matter in it which is always indicated by the color of the soil; the blacker the soil the more organic matter or carbon it contains. Soils that are not naturally rich should be made so by plowing in a heavy coat of rich barnyard manure. If a good crop of clover can be turned under it will be an excellent preparation for an orchard. The location should not be one where there will be much standing water. Until recently the advice has been to select a high and dry spot for an orchard. This advice has been followed too far. Trees need a great deal of moisture, as is evident when one thinks of the large amount of water given off during a hot summer day, through the leaves of an ordinary sized tree. Trees vary, however, in their ability to stand with their feet in water. If the land is deeply underdrained, the surplus, stagnant water will be removed and yet the soil rendered moist enough to furnish a sufficient supply of water to the trees. We would always advise underdraining for an orchard, if it can possibly be done. Remember preparations are being made now, the effects of which are to continue for years. If anything is worth doing well it is work of this kind, and mistakes made now will bring their yearly crop of regrets.

Before commencing operations let us consider the location in reference to its convenience to the house, for we are speaking of family rather than commercial orchards. It should be near the house, because a fine orchard adds so much to the beauty of the surroundings, and because it should be where fruit can be gathered as wanted without the necessity of going a quarter of a mile away for it. It should be at the back rather than in front or surrounding the house, and where it can be readily enclosed. If located so it can be used as poultry yard or hog pasture it will be found to pay to use the orchard for one or the other purpose. Other stock is apt to injure the trees. A northern or eastern slope is preferable to any other. Having settled, then, where to put the orchard, the next thing is the preparation. We have indicated some of the points in preparation, viz., underdraining and making the soil rich.

The plowing should be done as deeply as possible, especially if the land is not underdrained. Put the plow down deep and trench plow and subsoil if possible. This should be done right away, and then plow at intervals of a month until fall. Trees are best obtained of the nearest reliable nurseryman. Home grown trees are more apt to be acclimated and less liable to injury by transportation. Orders should be sent early to the nurseryman before his stock has been culled over. Set out trees in the fall when the ground is in better condition to work than in spring and other work is not so crowding.—Colman's Rural World.

A PLEASANT RELAPSE.

How One New York Woman for the Nonce Abandoned Her Anglomania.

The behavior of our Fifth avenue girls continues to be modeled after the London style, writes a New York correspondent. Fashion feeds on ridicule. The more fun that is made of Anglomania the more it rages. In no particular is there a sign of abatement. But I have just seen one maiden who relapsed briefly into Americanism, and it was positively refreshing. She was one of those hollow-backed, clean-cut girls who wear tailor-made costumes so neatly that their forgiveness for disloyalty to Yankeedom is easy. She was walking in the avenue with a swingy gait, suggestive of turf under her feet instead of hard stone. Although omnibuses are abolished from lower Broadway, they still run through this fashionable thoroughfare; and she decided to ride in one. A cold, distraught stare at the driver, and a slight fling upward of her hand, involving no motion above the wrist, brought the vehicle to a stop in the quite proper manner. Then she had to bid adieu to her companion—a dandy. "Good mawning," she drawled. "Had aw delightful saunter, aw awssure you—chawming, rewally."

By this time she was stepping into the stage, and the chappie was conveying his hat from the back of his little head to the front of his narrow breast for the fashionable bow. The driver reasoned that she ought to be inside. He slammed the door, shut it with a kick at the strap, and started his horses. But the belle was still outside. The lurch of the stage upset her backward, and she chugged down on the pavement with awful violence.

"Drat the fool!" she exclaimed, in most excellent American accent: "I'd like to ring the wooden head off him!"—N. Y. Letter.

THE "BULL-ROARER."

Description of a Toy Familiar to Most Children—Interesting Survival.

The "bull-roarer" is a toy familiar to most children. It is a long, thin, narrow piece of wood, sharpened at both ends; attached to a piece of string and, whirled rapidly and steadily in the air, it emits a sound which gradually increases to an unearthly kind of roar. The ancient Greeks employed at some of their sacred rites a precisely similar toy, described by historians as "a little piece of wood, to which a string was fastened, and in the mysteries it is whirled round to make a roaring noise." The performers in the mysteries at which this implement was used daubed themselves all over with clay. Demosthenes describes the mother of Æschines as a dabbler in mysteries, and tells how Æschines used to assist her by helping to bedaub the initiate with clay and bran.

Various explanations have been offered of these practices, but let us see how they tally with any prevailing customs. First, the bull-roarer is to be found in almost every country in the world, and among the most primitive peoples. It is so simple an instrument that it is within the scope of the mechanical genius of the most degraded savages, and therefore it is quite unnecessary to suppose that the idea of it was ever transmitted from race to race. And as an instrument employed in religious rites or mysteries, it is found in New Mexico, in Australia, in New Zealand and in Africa to this day. Its use in Australia is to warn the women to keep out of the way when the men are about to celebrate their tribal mysteries. It is death for woman to witness these rites, and it is also forbidden for them to look upon the sacred turndun, or bull-roarer. In the same way, among the Greeks, it was forbidden for men to witness the rites of the women, and for women to witness those of the men. Among the Indians of Zuni, Mr. Cushing found the same implement used by the priests to summon the tribe to the sacrificial feasts. In South Africa, Mr. Taylor has proved that the bull-roarer is employed to call the men only to the celebration of the sacred functions; and the instrument itself is described in Theal's Kaffir Folklore. Now the same peoples who still employ the bull-roarer as a sacred instrument also bedaub their bodies with clay, for no apparent reason unless it may be to frighten their enemies or any intruders.

We thus find still prevailing in our own time among savage races practices which are perfectly analogous to practices which prevailed among the Greeks. The reasonable inference, therefore, is not that the bull-roaring and body-daubing were first used in the rites of a civilized race of Greeks, and thence transmitted to Africa, Australia and America, but that the employment of these things by the Greeks was a survival of the time when the Greeks were in the same savage condition as are the peoples among whom we find the same things now.—All the Year Round.

AFRICA.

The Dark Continent to Be Systematically Explored.

We have had many lines run through Africa in all directions, and what is now needed is the leisurely study of the continent in detail. This is what will be done by the expedition which will leave England, fitted out at the expense of the Royal Geographical Society and commanded by Mr. J. T. Last, who as a lay agent of the Church Missionary Society has done admirable work in the Zanzibar interior. Mr. Last, after making up his caravan at Zanzibar, will proceed south to Lindi, to the north of the mouth of the Rovuma River. Thence Mr. Last will proceed to the confluence of the Rovuma and Lugende Rivers and fix the longitude of the junction, an important geographical point not yet settled. He will then go on in a generally southwesterly direction, and, before reaching the north end of Lake Sherwa, turn southward and make for the Namulli Hills, which, with other new features in this region, were discovered by Consul O'Neil, in the end of 1883. Here Mr. Last will establish himself and make a detailed study of the whole region in all its aspects. He will make a complete survey of the surrounding country, its topography, its people, its botany, economic products, climate and languages. When this is completed Mr. Last will enter the valley of the Likugu River, which rises in the neighborhood of these hills, and follow it down to the coast at Quizungu, whence he will travel south to Quilimane or north to Angoche, and thence to Mozambique. Mr. Last will make a special point of collecting all possible information concerning the country he passes through, its changes, its people, their customs, languages, etc., the climate, its sanitary conditions, and its suitability for the introduction of European and other economic plants. The Likugu Valley is said to be very thickly populated, and must, therefore, be unusually fertile, and so of interest both to the colonist and the trader. From what Mr. Last has already done, the best scientific results may be expected from an expedition so carefully planned, and which is likely to be a credit both to its leader and to the Geographical Society.—London Times.

Origin of Popular Phrases.

VAMOSE.—A Mexican phrase—an adaptation of the Spanish verb vamos, meaning literally, "let us go."

TAFFY.—This word, which is now used as a vulgar synonym of flattery, is by no means of recent origin, as many suppose, but was really coined 200 years ago, and has been in use in London fully that period.

BOSS.—This term, which is extensively used in the United States and England to designate the person placed as overseer of workmen and working women, is an improvement on the Dutch word baas, meaning employer.

BOGUS.—An Anglicism—the vulgate for "Borghese," the name of a forger who "operated" somewhat extensively across the water about thirty-five years ago. He passed false tokens and counterfeit bills to the amount of many thousand dollars, and hence the term "bogus" is applied to whatever is false and fraudulent.

A DELUSION, A MOCKERY AND A SNARE.—The fact that this familiar saying has about it a certain Biblical ring, has sometimes led to its being quoted as from one or other of the Hebrew prophets; the words are, in fact, an extract from the judgment of Lord Denman, of the English house of lords, on the appeal of Daniel O'Connell to that body from the verdict rendered at his trial.

RED TAPE.—An English expression, originated by Carlyle and made popular by Dickens. It was designed to represent the ceremonious delays and official formalities characteristic of the British governmental routine. It is similarly used in this country to ridicule the tardiness with which everything is effected by the formalism of government officials. The expression arises from the fact that government officers generally tie up their bundles of paper with red tape.

CANTEEN.—This is, perhaps, the only word in our language which, originally passed into a foreign tongue, and was afterward taken back in a modified form. As originally spoken by the Saxon, it was simply a tin can; but the Gaul, as is his wont, placing the noun before the adjective, and pronouncing the letter i as e, brought it out as cantin, pronounced canteen. Adopting a thousand other French terms, the obtuse Englishman took back his own original word in a new shape, without any inquiries on the subject, and hence we now say canteen instead of tin-can.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (shipsmithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it, do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 525 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

Crop Report for August.

The secretary of state sends out the following crop report:

The weather in harvest time was very favorable. At Lansing the total rain fall during July amounted to only two and four hundredths inches. The latter part of the month the growth began to be quite severe, but since Aug. 1 rain has fallen copiously. The average temperature in July was 74.35 degrees, the highest 91 degrees on the 20th, 28th, and 29th, and the lowest 47 degrees, on the 13th.

Wheat and hay have been secured in good condition, and are of superior quality. The estimates for wheat, made Aug. 1, after threshing had commenced in many parts of the state, show an average per acre in the southern four tier of counties of 18½ bushels, which is nearly a bushel above the July estimate. The August estimate for the northern counties is about one-fourth of a bushel below the July estimate. These figures indicate a total yield in the southern counties of 22,925,114 bushels, and in the state of 26,407,000 bushels. This exceeds the July estimate by 1,033,318 bushels. The amount of wheat in farmer's hands was reduced about two per cent. in July.

Corn promises, in the southern four tiers of counties 88 per cent. and in the counties north of the southern four tiers 22 per cent. the comparison being with virality and growth of average years. Oats are estimated to yield about 31 bushels and barley 25 bushels per acre. The yield of hay per acre was perhaps a trifle less in quantity than in 1884.

Clover sown this year has been badly injured by the drought.

Potatoes promise about nine-tenths of an average crop on an acreage not quite equal to an average.

Apples promise about half of an average crop.

For this report returns have been received from 1029 correspondents, representing 741 townships. Six hundred and eighty nine of these returns are from 441 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

OBITUARY.

The past two years have been marked in our Tecumseh society by the removal of many of its esteemed members by the hand of death. The majority of those thus removed have been veterans in age or in residence, or both. Some however have been taken in the very prime of their days, ere the sun of their life had touched its meridian. Of these, the last whose departure we have sorrowfully to chronicle is that of a young man well known and highly esteemed, Mr. Chas. J. Brewer. For two or three years Mr. B. has been an invalid, and during the last year had felt constrained to relinquish business and devote himself to the effort of regaining his health. After a consultation with physicians, it was determined as a last resort that he should try the efficacy of the Hot Springs, Arkansas. Thither he went, the last of May, accompanied by his own family and by his brother and family. He was brought home July 18th in an enfeebled condition, and in the early morning of July 25th, he breathed his last. The solicitude that was felt for his recovery, manifested itself in many kind inquiries concerning him, both before and during his absence, and after his return. The numbers who gathered in and around the house at his funeral service on Sabbath evening July 26th, bore testimony to the fact that he was sincerely mourned. As a business man, Mr. Brewer was distinguished for industry, integrity and urbanity. The latter trait won him friends, while the others gave them confidence in him and secured him their respect. In society he was affable and courteous though unobtrusive, ever ready with a smile of welcome, ever ready to do a kindness or to confer a favor. In the relation of husband and father he was tender and devoted—some of his last expressed anxieties being for those he dearly loved and for whose sakes he longed to live. Though suffering much and long, he bore his sufferings patiently, no word of murmuring being permitted to escape his lips. There may not be many of whose character the above would be a truthful sketch. But those who knew Mr. Brewer best will be the last to call it, in his case, overdrawn. His religious experience was deeply interesting and most encouraging. He who is wonderful in working seemed to lead him gradually, by means of sore afflictions, to himself, so that, at last he was able to express an humble trust in Jesus as his Savior. One of the deepest regrets he had was that he could not live to show by faithful service the sincerity of his trust. The sympathies of all are with Mrs. B. in her affliction and with the brother who is left now the sole representative of a family whose members have been taken one by one.

The Episcopal Sunday School held their annual picnic last Wednesday, at Wampler's lake. The weather was fine and all report a good time.

The Lancaster House is undergoing many changes, all tending to improve the appearance and to make it more convenient. The outside of the building has been very tastily painted, and some of the tumble-down buildings at the back of the house have been removed.

Among those who went from here to the Masonic picnic at Devils lake Tuesday, were Mr. and Mrs. D. Woodward, Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Lancaster, A. B. VanDeMark and family, Mrs. Mary Guiwits, George Depuy and A. G. Burton.

Rev. St. John held services at Milan for the first time last Sunday evening. The choir accompanied him, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. E. VanDeMark, Mrs. Josie St. John, Albert Kishpaugh and Miss Nellie Kishpaugh.

Cassius Fisk is busily engaged in improving the lot he has recently bought of J. W. Bradner; several old trees have been cut down, the lot graded, and many other improvements made which looks as though a fine residence might be erected.

Mrs. William Larzelere, of Saline, is visiting at John Martiny's.

The flouring mill has been taking a thorough overhauling inside, and a good coat of paint outside, preparatory to putting in the apparatus for roller process flour. What does the inventor of the steam injector think now of our being "two previus?"

The Congregational Sunday school are going to Wampler's Lake Friday.

The rite of baptism was administered to the two youngest children and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Semark last Sunday at St. John's church.

Miss Lottie Ellis returned to her home in Hillsdale last Tuesday.

A party, consisting of Belden Mills and wife, L. K. Davis and family, David Haggart and wife, Frank Johnson and wife, Charles Priest and family, Frank Woodward and wife, John VanTuyle and wife spent Saturday and Sunday camping out at Wampler's Lake.

The M. E. Sunday school have a picnic at Wampler's lake Thursday.

Quite cool nights.

Upwards of 50 were at the station Saturday morning to go on the Put-in-Bay excursion, but returned to their homes with blood in their eyes.

Rev. W. J. Clack will attend the Methodist camp meeting near Bellville this week.

Weddie Bush left for Dixon, Ill., Thursday.

Mrs. T. W. Mead, of Biglow, Kan., visited friends in the village this week.

We understand that Rev. Peter Sharp will occupy the pulpit next Sunday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Hannibal Rappleye and two of their children, of Philadelphia, are visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rappleye.

Mr. and Mrs. Erastus Rappleye were at the village visiting friends last week.

Mr. Chas. Kelly is the happiest man in this town, he being papa of a fine boy baby.

Miss Emma Gilbert, assistant supt. and also secretary of the industrial home for girls at Adrian, was the guest of Mr. W. R. Wilson, Sunday.

Presiding Elder Campbell occupied the desk Sunday evening.

Saturday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rappleye enjoyed a pleasant afternoon with their sons, Hannabal, Erastus and Lafayette and their wives and some of their grand-children and also Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Rappleye, of Dundee, and Mrs. P. W. Mead. They spent the afternoon very pleasantly at their father's new home.

Mr. Arthur Kelly and Misses Ida Arner and Johnny Gordeneer spent the day at Adrian, Saturday. Wonder if the outfit was ordered.

About 50 went to Devils lake Tuesday on the excursion given by the masons, and report a good time.

The chicken pie festival to be held in the basement of the Christian church at Britton is to be postponed until Sept. 2d.

The executive committee of the Ridgeway Literary Society have decided to arrange for a public entertainment to be given sometime in September, instead of an ice cream lawn social next week. Cold weather and excursions to Devils lake the reason.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Just cool enough to be pleasant.

A good rain is needed.

The old red school house which has served so long has been removed, and thus another land mark is gone. The new building in its place is a fine looking structure.

Walter Exelby was thrown from his horse last Wednesday and received some severe bruises. He is doing well.

Elder Griffith, an old time pastor in these parts filled the pulpit last Sunday, and preached a fine sermon to a large audience. He has a warm place in the hearts of the people here.

The Sunday excursions do not receive a very hearty support from this place.

A number of disappointed excursionists were left on the platform here last Saturday. They wished to go to Put-in-Bay but the train was already loaded.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Ed. Bullen, the engineer at Gunn's brick and tile factory was under the weather last week to such an extent as to disqualify him for work; but we are glad to note that under the efficient treatment of Dr. Brown he is on duty again as usual.

Referring to the immediate cause of Albert Carpenter's death last week the types made us say Chronic spasms instead of Clonic, as styled by the examining physicians. We hasten to correct.

We notice a new departure on the part of the Brooklyn Exponent of last week by way of a well selected column of state News. Sister Clough is by no means slow to recognize and supply the wants of her readers.

The trespass case of Hutchinson and Pearson has been appealed to the circuit court for the final test.

Eugene Baker is going to Crawford county to reside in a short time.

Our readers will remember the clever dodge which John Rose of this place gave the officers on the night of July 29th. It was his third offence and trial for drunkenness and as the Court was about to find him a position for one year; John concluded to attend to that matter himself, and forthwith took steps to do so. The scheme operated to a charm at first, but as time wore on he began to tire of wandering up and down in the earth without "purse or scrip" and last Sunday voluntarily submitted himself to the tender mercies of the law. Monday morning Justice Waterman commuted the sentence to eight months in the work house at Detroit. The prisoner was taken to the county jail by Deputy Sheriff Morley.

The historical and miscellaneous lecture given by Prof. Alexander at Blowers hall a week ago this evening was attended by a number of our town folks and is well spoken of.

Our village Sabbath schools, Methodist and Congregational, united in a picnic at Beardsells landing, Devil's lake on Thursday the 13th inst. Although the weather was unusually cool for the season, all present reported a very enjoyable time.

Miss May Sprout, of Pickney Livingston County and sister of Mrs. A. Crane has returned for a visit of more or less length here.

Mrs. C. A. Ennis, of Brooklyn, spent a few days last week visiting at Mrs. Somers' place.

Mr. M. M. Mallorey, of Reading, spent Sunday visiting at Will J. Bacon's place here. Mr. M. devotes his attention to bee culture and is a thorough master of the business.

We are informed that Alic Cole's horse barn is to receive a new coat of paint this week. Mr. C. has one of the most tasty residences in the place.

We note some changes at the new milinery store this week. Miss M. E. Campbell withdraws from the business and Mrs. J. R. Skutt receives Mrs. Hattie Lane as a partner. The new firm will continue the business at the old stand.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The public pulse is returning slowly to normal steadiness, though there are still spasmodic throbs over the sewing machine war. No minister has ever called out such a congregation here as listened to Hewitt, Sharp and Crowel plead the merits of their respective clients, to win a favorable verdict. The truth is, there is little merit in quarrels anywhere, and small chance for justice where facts and proof are supposed and law revised to to suit occasion. Extenuating circumstances were discernable in the back-ground, but the accused admitted he conquered by force, and would do the same again, so he was assessed five dollars worth, and a fuss stopped that was ruinous to his purse, drawing his neighbors into trouble, and making the county more expense than all the silly quarrels in creation are worth. It gave play-goers a very comic show, rendered by home talent, and some who came twelve miles and could only get standing room out of doors and frame their heads in an open window, assert it surpassed Forepaugh. Those concerned in the unpleasantness are not puffed up with vanity if they believe half they were told about themselves, and they are very good people outwardly, it is surprising how they manage to conceal such bad intentions. Their amusement has probably cost three hundred dollars, but the real mischief maker escaped all penalty, and is believed to have made a per cent of profit.

ONSTED ODDS.

Last Sunday we had the pleasure of listening to Mr. D. B. Reed of Hillsdale College.

Quite a large crowd was here last Saturday to take the excursion to Put-in-Bay, but failed to catch on as the train was loaded and did not stop.

The ball play last Saturday afternoon resulted in the defeat of Rome. Large attendance. The horse race was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. Hines commenced work on his cellar this week.

Mr. John Hand has the job of building a house for John Darling, on North side of R. R. Began work this week.

Dick Daniels is working on his wall on the South side of R. R.

On Tuesday last quite a number went from here on the Masonic excursion to Devils Lake, and everybody expects to go to the Farmer's picnic to-day.

THE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The State Teachers' Institute now in session at Adrian opened last Monday with a large attendance. From the Times of Tuesday we gather the following with reference to the work, etc., up to that time:

This morning, the second day of the teachers' institute, opened under very auspicious circumstances. About 150 teachers were present, and the institute was divided into two divisions for section work. Prof. Humphrey was assigned to give instruction in teaching arithmetic, physiology and civil government, and to give general lectures on alcohol and narcotics; Prof. Walker on advanced reading, U. S. history and grammar, and general talks on school government, morals and manners, and teachers' examinations. Prof. George's department comprises orthography, primary reading and geography, with general lectures on class methods and general work. The instructors are all capable, genial gentlemen, and the work is bound to proceed with vigor and method.

This forenoon sectional work was performed on advanced reading and arithmetic, with a lecture on primary reading. This afternoon the class work will be on orthography and physiology, while a lecture will be delivered on morals and manners.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY REUNION.

The twenty-second annual reunion of the Raisin Valley Seminary took place on Friday last in the afternoon.

The literary exercises were held in the Seminary hall and consisted of music, an oration, and a poem. Fred Hathaway acted as president of the meeting and Libbie Stanley as secretary. The music was furnished by a male quartette from Adrian. Below is the program as rendered:

1—Vocal music, Come where the lilies bloom.

2—Devotional exercises.

3—Oration by Celia B. Jones, entitled, the Spirit of the Times.

4—Quartette, Laugh, Boys, Laugh.

5—Poem by Miss Anna Bartlett, entitled, Wait.

6—Music, When shall we Meet again.

7—Remarks by Miss Mariana Brown.

8—Election of officers for the coming year.

Then followed refreshments, ice cream, etc. which were served beneath the old oaks on the lawn, and to which all present did ample justice. The attendance was large and a most enjoyable afternoon was passed.

"Grant's Memorial: what shall it be?" is discussed in the September number of the North American Review, by Launt Thompson, Karl Gerhardt, O. L. Warner, and Wilson McDonald, sculptors; W. H. Beard, painter; Calvert Vaux and Henry Van Brunt, architects; and Clarence Cook, art critic. This symposium is sure to attract wide attention at this time, when the desire is so general to erect a monument to Grant that shall be worthy of the man, the nation, and American art.

BEAUTIFUL PETOSKEY.

We print a letter from Mr. John R. Clarke this week which arrived too late for insertion in last week's issue. It is interesting reading, like everything that comes from his pen.

Northern Michigan, noted for its exquisite ruggedness, has no lovelier spot than Petoskey.

I was permitted to feel the throb of inspiration for two days last week while there as a lecturer and hearer. Among the worthies present to regale the people were Bishops Bowman and Mallilieer of the M. E. Church. Their addresses were full of unctious power, and were richly enjoyed by the assembled hosts.

This great State has all the resources for pleasure and profit of her people, and while the old Empire State boasts of her beautiful Chatauqua, and Massachusetts of Martha's Vineyard, Maine of Old Orchard Beach, Illinois of her Lake Bluff and Ohio of Lakeside, Michigan has her popular and restful Petoskey. Standing on the shore of this northern bay is the cluster of dwellings, pretty vilas, terraces, romantic cottages, all of varid and unique design, calculated to suit the taste of the aesthetic champion of effeminate namby-pamby-ism, Oscar Wilde. Overshadowed by the spreading branches of stately trees, standing like sturdy pillars all about you giving the place the appearance of a magnificent Cathedral of Nature, and while sitting neath the leafy roof, cooled by the bay breese, sprinkled by the golden dust of the sunlight; inspired by oratory, enlightened by philosophy, strengthened by truths as they fall from various lips, certainly this place is none other than an intellectual Bethel. And I am not surprised at the people making strong efforts season after season to leave the round of home and business conventionalism to reach the beneficiaries of northern air and intellectual affinity in the social life of Petoskey.

I wish, Mr. Editor, I had your graceful power with the pen. Methinks I could awaken an ardent desire among the people of Lenawee county to spend some days in summertide at this beautiful resort in quest of physical and intellectual health.

JOHN R. CLARKE.

TWO BURGLARS CAPTURED.

From the Times of Friday we gather the following particulars of the manner in which two gentlemanly burglars were hauled in by officers:

Deputy Sheriffs Burch and Teachout were following a lead yesterday afternoon whereby they hoped to capture the chaps who went through the Lawrence house Wednesday night, when they experienced a decided and not unpleasant surprise. Their way led to Clayton, and, leaving their horses at the village, they began to search some woods a mile or two to the east. Taking each side of the railroad, they advanced some distance, when Officer Burch, who was penetrating the second piece of timber, saw a man some distance away, who was intently watching some railroad men, who were working on the track. Stealing quietly forward the officer quickly captured the fellow. Searching him he found several new silk handkerchiefs, and other articles having a stolen flavor, and, after a little conversation, he was astonished to hear the chap confess that his name was George Ganshaw, and that he had had a hand in the Clayton burglaries of some weeks ago. Further interrogating brought the knowledge that Ganshaw had a partner named James Lynch, who, he said, was at Adrian waiting for a ride to Detroit. Taking the prisoner to Clayton the two officers hurried to this city, when, having jailed him, they started to search the Lake Shore grounds, accompanied by Sheriff Whitmore. Deputy Sheriff Burch was again the lucky man. He had scarcely reached the passenger house when, from the description given by Ganshaw, he recognized Lynch in a person who was standing upon the platform, viewing the surroundings with all the nonchalance of an experienced traveler. Employing a baggageman and his lantern, the deputy moved toward Lynch, when that worthy made a hasty attempt at flight. He was too late, however, and in a few moments his wrists wore the cuffs. The two prisoners were arraigned before Justice Payne this morning, and they will undoubtedly receive a nice long sentence at the next term of the circuit court. The officers suspect with good reason, that but for the capture, Clayton would have had another burglary that night.

The Saline Observer says: The advance guard of the Salvation Army was in Saline, Tuesday, looking over the ground with a view of moving onto our sinners' works. They talk of renting the roller rink for barracks. They will find an excellent field for work at Saline and we wish them abundant success.

John Hazlett has joined the great army of Benedicts having taken to himself a wife in the person of Mary McKinney. The ceremony was performed at Albion at Miss McKinney's relatives.

TECUMSEH, MICH., AUG. [illegible]

HER WAY TO SAY "NO."

My sweetheart sat knitting. My darling said,
[illegible]
But she kept her black curls as the field
[illegible]
I wished I was a little angel around
And breaking of hearts [illegible]
I said: "Now you really let me tease it to you."
She answered: "[illegible]"

I sighed and I frowned, and I looked up at the clock
Regretting that soon I must go;
Then looked at my sweetheart but she had up the rock,
Saying: "Why do you put red in the toe?"
"You shall hear me, darling, you dearest of girls,"
She placed both her hands on her brow
And languishingly said, as she threw back the curls:
"Just wait—I am narrowing now."

"I dreamed of a cottage close down by the sea
Neath the brightest and bluest of skies."
She answered: "Sit further away from me, please,
My needles [illegible] in your eyes."
"I dreamed we were there in that home of the [illegible]
And that love, darling, love made us rich—
"I told you to sit further off once before;
You're the cause of my dropping a stitch."

At last it was finished, then sadly I said
"Am I dearest, love, to [illegible]?"
She took the chair, shook it and severed the thread,
Saying "Warm! I've fastened the end."
"Will you marry, me, darling?" I said in low tone—
There was nothing to do but to go;
For I learned at the last what I first might have known—
It was a waste of her way to say "No."

THE HOUSE-FLY.

A Chapter on the History of This "Adjunct of Culture."

How the Fly Moves, Lives and Obtains Its Nourishment—The Development of Its Wings—What Becomes of the Tormentors in Winter—General Points.

Some one has observed how little we really know about our intimate friends—even those living under the same roof. The same remark will, in a degree apply to that ever present household companion, the house-fly. Wherever civilization penetrates, there go the honey-bee and the house-fly, twin adjuncts of the higher culture. And yet how little is known of the life-history of the fly—where its eggs are placed, where its young live upon what they live, how they become flies, and how long they remain with us.

If we examine one of them, it will be seen that the fly has six legs, composed of a number of segments or joints fitting movable upon each other; the joints of tarsal joints are five in number. To the last joint are attached two hooked claws, and if anyone will examine the fly's foot with a microscope, he will discover between the claws a little cushion which is deeply cleft into two parts or lobes. The under sides of the flaps have microscopic peculiarities which are wanting on the rest of the foot, and are called "tenent hairs." These hairs are hollow, and secrete a sticky fluid. Each tenent hair is bent near the end, beyond which, Dr. Says Tuffen West, "is an elastic membranous expansion, capable of close contact with a highly polished surface, from which a very minute quantity of a clear, transparent fluid is emitted when the fly is actively moving."

Mr. West also adds, that when a fly is not making use of its cushions, as on a surface sufficiently rough to afford it foot hold with its claws alone, these only are made use of.

As early as 1667 Hooke noticed the importance of the grasp gained by the claws, when drawing against the strong, forward-pointing hairs situated on the base of each tarsal joint, whenever any projections or a yielding surface are afforded by the object on which the fly is walking. Hooke also believed in the existence of a "smoky substance on glass."

This, says West, has been considered a mistake, "and yet it is certain that glass very frequently undergoes a slow decomposition on its surface in a moist atmosphere, from the excess of alkali in its composition. Such a change is speedily produced in glass exposed to the action of the weather, as in our window-panes, and conveys the appearance as if a 'smoky substance' were condensed upon it.

It has been proved by most careful observations, which may be readily verified by any one desirous of getting at the truth, that this tarnish does very materially assist a fly when in a weak state in maintaining its hold, and in freely moving upon the glass. To keep our windows clear for the admission of light, it requires to be constantly removed.

Opticians call a similar deposition of moisture the "sweating of glass."

West further describes the way in which the actual movements of the fly's foot are made. The cushions are set down on a smooth surface, perpendicular or horizontal, and the numberless tenent hairs applied to such surface; "a slight push forward of these, succeeded by a gentle draw backwards, at each application, removes the air between their soft, elastic expansions and their plane of motion, and thus a firm hold is gained. Access of air is prevented by the minute quantity of moisture which exudes from the expanded tips of the tenent appendages; and thus a vacuum is formed, on the same principle as in the 'atmospheric hat-peg,' the 'plate-holder' of the photographer, or the 'artificial gums' of the dentist. When the fly wishes to move a leg from its place of attachment, the claws are brought down and pressed against the surface; from their position they raise the hinder part of the pulvilus [illegible] where the tenent hairs are first disclosed, first, and so on forwards. If the claws were attached to the extreme part, as it has been supposed, they could not act equally well, in the way I have mentioned; and I think a fly when once stuck fast, if it had no claws, might remain so."

It should be remarked, as any one may do, that the fly takes all speeds, moves the legs in its own peculiar alternately in walking. After all, the process of the attachment is the same again, be it a fly or a lizard, or a lizard, to perfectly [illegible] surfaces.

It is very interesting to watch from most attractive [illegible] having for a single pair of wings, which correspond to the second or posterior pair of wings, give to being a pair of [illegible] "balancers." The [illegible] of the [illegible] most rapid in [illegible] wings. We all know how busy and perhaps [illegible] movements are in dog-day weather.

It has been found that a common fly when in full exercise vibrates its wings three hundred and thirty times a minute, whereas a honey-bee, whose powers of continued flight are much greater, moves its wings one hundred and ninety times in the same period. The wings describe a figure 8 in the air.

The buzz of the fly has been carefully studied by Landois. During flight the fly's buzz or hum is in a relatively low tone, when it is held so that the wings can not move the buzz is higher in pitch, and it is higher still when the fly is held so that all motion of the external parts is prevented. The last mentioned is the true voice of the insect; it is produced by the breathing holes of the thorax. The buzz of the fly thus expresses the emotions of the creature; the hum being one of contentment, the shrill, excited buzz one of alarm and [illegible].

When a fly alights upon our hand or face on a hot day it is for the purpose of lapping the perspiration from the skin. How this is done is a curious study. When the fly, to quote from our "Guide to the Study of Insects," settles upon a lump of sugar, or other sweet object, it unbends and extends its tongue, and the broad knob-like end divides into two flat, muscular leaves, which thus present a sucker-like surface, with which the fly laps up liquid sweets. These two leaves are supported upon a framework of chitinous rods, which act as a set of springs to open and shut the muscular leaves. The inside of this broad fleshy expansion is rough like a rasp, and, as Newport states, is easily employed by the insect in scraping or tearing delicate surfaces. It is by means of this curious structure that the busy house-fly occasions much mischief to the covers of our books, by scraping off the albuminous polish, and leaving traces of its depredations in the soiled and spotted appearance which it occasions on them.

The structure of the fly's tongue, and of the whole apparatus for taking its food, has engaged the attention in late years of some of our best anatomists of insects. Its structure is so complicated and difficult to understand, and labored anatomical descriptions are so dry, that we will not here describe it, but content ourselves with referring the reader for an excellent description of the fly's proboscis to Professor Macloskie's article in the American Naturalist for March, 1880. Suffice it to say that the fly has not, as have beetles and grasshoppers, free jaws and accessory jaws for biting and tearing the food, but all the mouth-parts of other insects are represented in the fly's proboscis, the larger part of which is formed by the under lip, the enlarged and variously modified fleshy extremity of which forms a sucking organ. What little food is taken by the fly's fluid sweet, thick, are its favorite diet.

But whence come the swarm of midsummer flies, and how do they keep increasing through August? What becomes of them in the winter? How long do they live, and what of the manner of life of their young? Are the small flies the children of the larger ones?

So little was known about the early history of the house-fly that we once endeavored, and with fair success, to study its transformations. During August the house-fly is particularly abundant, and especially so in and about stables. On placing a fly in a bottle she laid between six p. m., August 12, and eight o'clock the next morning, one hundred and twenty eggs. They were deposited irregularly in stacks, lying loose in two piles at the bottom of the bottle. The next day several maggots, as the larvae are called, were observed crawling about in the bottom of the bottle. Afterwards by placing a mass of offal in the sun, the flies came and laid the little white slender eggs, which hatched out, so that thousands of writhing maggots abounded in the mass.

It was found that the young maggots hatched in twenty-four hours after the eggs were laid. At first they are but little larger than the eggs. After remaining in the first stage for one day the maggot moults, being a little larger than before. After another day it sheds its skin a second time and enters upon the third stage of its larval life, which lasts three or four days. It breathes by means of two spiracles or air-holes at the end of the body, which communicate with the air-tubes in the body. There is also a spiracle near the head. When about to transform into the pupa or chrysalis state, the body contracts into a barrel-shaped case, and turns brown and hard. This case is called the puparium, and within it the maggot becomes a pupa or chrysalis.

The house-fly, having as a maggot lived a squalid existence, after a pupal sleep of from five to seven days, pushes off one end of its pupal case, and on emerging from the case, immediately runs about, though its wings are still small, soft and baggy, much as in the pupa. Soon, however, the skin becomes dry and hard; the fluid in the wings dries, and in a few moments the fly takes flight.

If in its winged state the fly is one of the most disagreeable features of dog-days, and people wonder why flies were ever made at all, it should be remembered that flies have an infancy as maggots, and the loathsome life they then lead as scavengers cleanses and purifies the August air, and aids in lowering the death rate of our cities and towns.

While most house-flies die on approach of winter, multitudes being attacked by a white fungus, their so-called dead bodies remaining on the walls or windows in October, a few live through the winter. While writing this article on the first warm day in spring a few flies have for the first time made their appearance in our study. These will lay their eggs about stables, and the spring and thus give rise to a swarm of maggots and August flies.—A. S. Packard, Jr., in Popular Science Monthly.

FRAUDS IN CIGARS.

Fraudulent Manufacturers Who Imitate Popular and Expensive Brands.

"Now, there's a cigar," said a tobacco merchant, whose firm handled more than a million dollars' worth of cigars a year, "that has made a great reputation within the past year, and which is eagerly smoked by no good judges of cigars, and yet there is so much cheating done in this particular brand that fully two-thirds of the smokers are swindled. I am not surprised, either, that they do not find it out, as the cheating is very adroitly done. The price of the cigar to dealers is twenty-two and a half cents, and yet you can buy the cigar, or what they pretend is the cigar, all over town for twenty-five cents. We will not retail them for less than twenty-eight cents, because that gives us little enough profit."

"Are all that are sold for twenty-five cents bogus?"

"They are not the true imported brand, as a rule. Of course, there are occasional big hotels and restaurants that are content to handle them at a margin of two and a half cents. The fraud is effected in this way: Clerks or boys in the hotels or restaurants where the genuine brand is sold keep the boxes when they become empty and supply them at a fair cost—say fifty cents apiece—to the small dealers. A domestic cigar is manufactured of the exact shape and color of the imported brand, and the box is filled with these domestic cigars. The box is genuine, and the cigars very much like the real thing. The dealer, by this little game, clears about thirteen cents on a cigar—a pretty tidy profit, and well worth the ruse even if it is a State Prison offense."

"How can one detect the spurious one?"

"Only an expert can tell the difference in the make of the cigar at a glance, but if you look carefully at the date on the box it might give you a clew. For instance, I saw some cigars that were not over a week old the other day that were in a box labeled October 12. The manufacturers on the other side are endeavoring to throw difficulties in the way of these fraudulent dealers by putting a peculiar glaze on their boxes. But the cigar thieves soon get a hold of the boxes, so what are they going to do about it?"—N. Y. Sun.

THE THREE GREAT LANGUAGES.

Comparative Importance of the English Over the French and German Tongues.

The language in which Shakespeare and Milton wrote was the language of but five or six millions of people in their day, and as late as one hundred years ago English was spoken by not more than fifteen or sixteen million people, says the Paris American Register. At the same period French was the mother tongue of at least thirty million people, and German, in one or other of its forms, was the language of from thirty to forty million people. This state of affairs is now completely reversed. Between forty and fifty years ago the English language equaled the German in the number of those who spoke it, and now the latter is left far behind in the race. German is spoken by 10,000,000 persons in the Austria-Hungarian empire, 40,000,000 in the German empire, 10,000 in Belgium, 2,000,000 in Switzerland, and the native tongue of some 2,000,000 in the United States and Canada. This gives a total of about sixty million persons who may speak German.

With French the case is much the same, but the gain during the past century has been smaller than that of German. French is now spoken by the 38,000,000 people of France, by 2,250,000 in Belgium, 200,000 in Alsace-Lorraine, 600,000 in Switzerland, 1,500,000 in Canada and the United States, 600,000 in Hayti, and by 1,500,000 in Algiers, India, the West Indies, and Africa; in all about forty-five million.

English is now spoken by all but some 500,000 of the 37,000,000 persons in the British Islands, by 53,000,000 out of the 56,000,000 inhabitants of the United States, by 4,000,000 persons in Canada, 3,000,000 in Australasia, 1,700,000 persons in the West Indies, and perhaps by 1,000,000 in India and the other British colonies. This brings up the total to 100,000,000, which can not be very far from the truth.—Chicago News.

A Disinterested Party.

"Hello, there!" called out a bartender in a West Brighton beer pavilion while the thirsty souls from an incoming boat surged in front of him. "Hello, there! you didn't pay."

But the two men he addressed did not seem to hear him, and they lounged outside.

"Say, Fritz," called out the bartender to a waiter. "Say, Fritz, bail them fellers for the price. They've gone out without settling."

The tall German laid down his tray, wiped his mouth with his apron and started ferociously after the receding couple. Soon he came back with a festoon of dark blue under the battlements of his left eye. There was a rent in his duster and a lump under his jaw the size of a codfish ball.

"Did you collect?" called out the bartender.

"Naw," said the waiter.

"Wouldn't they give up?"

"Naw."

"What did you do?"

"Tole dem to seddle up or I'd wollop dem."

"That was right. What did they say to that?"

"Nodings. Von pucked me by der chaw, der odder fetched me on der eye. Dey nogged me oud right avay, I bed you."

"The deuce they did. Did you smash 'em back?"

"Smash 'em back? Naw; vat for should I take up your kivarrels?"

LONG-LIVED PEOPLE.

Features of a Classified Record of Ten Thousand Centenarians.

Joseph E. Perkins, a newspaper dealer of this city, is about to publish a book entitled "The Encyclopedia of Human Longevity," which is the result of three years of investigation on a subject. The book will contain an authentic record of a large number of people, men and women, who have attained the age of one hundred years or more. The only exception to the rule is the case of a man who died at the age of one hundred and [illegible] years and [illegible] days, and whom Mr. Perkins regards as a certain a centenarian. The book will represent an immense amount of labor and research, and its author believes that it may be relied on as accurate in every instance.

"I have," said Mr. Perkins, in speaking of his book, "more than ten thousand instances of people who have lived one hundred years and more. These names have been gathered from every part of the globe. This country leads in longevity and Connecticut is at the front among the United States. In that State I have gathered statistics in regard to more than six thousand persons who were more than eighty years of age, and of this number twenty were beyond the century limit. As regards sex the majority of these ten thousand centenarians were women. I account for this by the fact that they lead less irregular lives than men. I have instances of fifty old maids who come up to my century standard, and only twelve bachelors. As regards occupation I find that sailors, soldiers and farmers are the longest lived. Among the professions I have the instances of one hundred ministers who lived to one hundred years and more, while I could find only thirty doctors, ten lawyers and ten actors who came up to the standard. I can find no case among my ten thousand of a newspaper man who has lived to be one hundred years old. Newspaper men do so much brain work that they die young."

Coming to special instances, Mr. Perkins added: "Among the oldest people in the United States were Flora Thompson, a negress of Nashua, N. C., who died at the age of one hundred and fifty years; Betsy Frantham, a native of Germany, who died in Tennessee at the age of one hundred and fifty-four years; and Sinx, a slave, who died in Virginia, one hundred and eighty years old. I have the cases of ten persons who lived in safety for one hundred years and were then burned to death. In Onondaga County I have the sketches of fifty centenarians. Among them is the Rev. Daniel Waldo, who died in 1864 at the age of nearly one hundred and two years. For more than sixty years he was a clergyman in the Presbyterian Church, and on the anniversary of his one hundredth birthday he preached a sermon in the First Presbyterian Church of Syracuse. The last six pensioners of the Revolutionary War were centenarians and I have their photographs. Then there was John Weeks, of New London, Conn., who married his tenth wife when he was one hundred and six years of age and she only sixteen. He died at the age of one hundred and fourteen. His gray hairs had fallen off and they were renewed by a dark growth of hair. Several new teeth had also made their appearance, and a few hours before his death he ate three pounds of pork, two or three pounds of bread, and drank a pint of wine. Nicholas Schathowski, of Posen, was another old fellow. He deposed on oath before the Council of Constance, A. D. 1414, that he was one hundred and fifty years of age, and that his father, whose age at the time of his death was nearly two hundred, could remember the death of the first King of Poland, A. D. 1025. Among the oddities to be found in my book will be the photograph of a man who died at the age of one hundred and twenty-one years. He had one hundred and forty-four children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren and outlived them all. Then there was Margaret McDowal, of Edinburgh, who died at the age of one hundred and six. She married and survived thirteen husbands. John Rovin and his wife, of Hungary, lived together as man and wife for one hundred and forty-eight years. He was one hundred and sixty-four and she was one hundred and seventy-two years at the time they died, and their youngest son was one hundred and sixteen years old when the parents died.

"Then there is the case of a man who married sixteen times and had no children. This case is offset by that of another centenarian who had forty-nine children. John Riva, an exchange broker of Italy, lived to the age of one hundred and sixteen years and had a child born to him after he was one hundred years old. Betz, a Sioux squaw, who died a little while ago, lived for more than one hundred years. She had been the wife in turn of an army officer, an Indian chief, a border highwayman, and a Methodist minister. William Ward, of Westchester County, died in 1778 at the age of one hundred and seven. He was a member of the Ward family who were among the earliest settlers in Westchester County, and the particulars of his life and death were given in the New York papers of the time. His brother John was a magistrate, and attended court in White Plains as late as 1773. William Ward, a member of this family, carried on business as a banker in 1883 at No. 52 Broadway, New York. Another queer incident is that of a centenarian who was married four times and had a daughter by each wife. These daughters married, and each of them had fourteen children. Then there was a man who went over the century line and had twenty-two children. His first was a boy, and girls and boys came after that in regular rotation. There was a person known as Elizabeth Page, who lived in London and died at the age of one hundred and eight years. This person had acted as a midwife, and was supposed to be a woman. After death, however, it was discovered that the supposed woman was a man."—Syracuse (N. Y.) Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

THE WONDER

Is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve, and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

A. L. HINCKLEY,

LIFE IN SIAM.

The King With Three Thousand Wives—A Great Elephant Hunt.

"The King is a man of about thirty-two. He is a pleasant, intelligent and well-meaning man. He speaks English. His secretary is also his half brother. It is easy enough to secure an audience. There is very little ceremony, considering that it is an Asiatic court. I would, for instance, address a note to the secretary and say I wished to have an audience with the King. A reply would come promptly, agreeing to request. I would don a full dress suit, present myself at the gates of the palace, be received by the guards, passed along by different functionaries until I reached His Majesty's presence. He would shake hands with me in ordinary European fashion, listen to what I had to say, and when I had finished I would rise and bow myself out. When I told my English and French colleagues that I never awaited the King's pleasure to terminate the interview, but always rose when I stated my business they were somewhat surprised. They regarded it as a breach of etiquette, but the King, I am told, liked it very much.

"The King is a very much married man. He has some three thousand wives. The establishment where they are housed is a city almost in itself. They are kept very close from the eyes of men. No Europeans and very few natives of the male sex are allowed to enter the sacred precincts. Mrs. Palgrave, the wife of the English agent, did get permission once to visit the Queen's establishment. There is, by the way, only one Queen, the others are merely concubines. It was very plainly furnished. There was no splendor, gorgeousness and all that sort of thing at all. The floors were marble and the women sat on mats and rugs. They were chewing the betel root and constantly spitting; spittoons abounded. A few hangings were all the decorations the walls had. The women were very much like the Chinese women. The head is large, the face broad, forehead low, the cheek bones prominent, the lips thick, the eyes black, though not upturned as in the case of the Chinese. There is, of course, a whole army of female attendants."

"Now something about Siam's politics?"

"Well, you know it is an absolute monarchy. But there are two parties, or rather factions. One is headed by the King, and the other was led until recently, when he died, by the ex-Regent, who governed during the minority of the present King. There exists a great deal of jealousy, and as the crown does not descend by right of primogeniture, the death of a ruler gives rise always to serious trouble. The present dynasty has held sway for about four generations. I had a little difficulty when the ex-Regent died, which did not, however, lead to any serious consequences. He was a sour old gentleman, querulous and cross. I paid him a visit in my official capacity, and so did the English and French agents in theirs. He returned their calls, but did not return mine. When he died all the foreign representatives half-masted their flags according to custom. I did not. I was requested by the Prime Minister to do so. I refused. I said that a man who had shown so little respect for the flag of the United States should not be honored by it when dead. The matter was reported to the King. He said nothing. But when I saw him later he told me that he was very glad I acted as I did. It taught the followers of the ex-Regent a lesson.

"The King remembered General Grant very well. When I left Siam he charged me with a message for him. I was prevented through General Grant's illness from delivering it. Altogether I succeeded very well, indeed, in gaining the King's confidence. When he received me in audience for the last time he said: 'I hope you will come back. General Grant had two terms. You ought to have two terms also.' He presented me with two decorations, and also wished to present me with a valuable piece of property. This, however, I refused. But I induced him to give it in fee simple, to the United States for the use of a Legation, the first instance in which a similar gift has been conveyed to the United States by a foreign power."

General Haldeman, among other interesting experiences in Siam, was able to be present at a Royal elephant hunt. This was by special invitation of the King, who further distinguished him by requesting the General to take a seat by his side. The wild elephants were decoyed into a sort of corral or lockade by tame elephants. Over a hundred were caught on this occasion.—Interview with Minister Haldeman, in N. Y. Tribune.

Keeping His Hand In.

Sambo was out in the back lot, lasting a poor dilapidated mule with a club, when a neighbor came along and stopped him.

"What the dickens are you abusing that mule for?" he inquired.

"Cause I wants ter keep my han' in. De old woman's done gwine off fo' fo' weeks, an' of I fo'git how ter ack, I'se afeerd she won't reckonize her husban' when she comes back an' 'll be tryin' to git er divo'ce. Women is mighty pa' tic'lah 'bout bein' treated jis as dey is uster."—Merchant Traveler.

FOUNDER IN HORSES.

A Very Common Disease, and How It Should Be Treated.

Acute rheumatism is a very common disease among horses. When it reaches the chronic stage it is nothing more nor less than founder. In cases of this kind the whole muscular system sometimes seems affected, and it often is. At others the fore or hind parts alone or the feet appear affected. Founder is produced by chilling the animal when exhausted or much fatigued; he may be chilled after a brisk drive by exposure to the weather, by external influences, or he may be chilled by imbibing cold water in quantity sufficient to reduce the temperature of the system too suddenly. Driving into a pond when in a state of perspiration or exposing the horse to a cold wind or rain are also fruitful sources of rheumatism and founder. The disease is apt at times to locate in all unscribed situations, about a joint or muscular region.

Treatment of Acute Rheumatism.—The best prescription is invariably the following nauseating cathartic: Six drachms of powdered aloes and two drachms of powdered lobelia in one pint of warm water. Free action of the bowels must be persisted in, and they must afterward be kept soluble by means of some such remedy as the following: Two drachms, each of cream of tartar, sulphur, podophyllum and wine of colchicum, mixed in a pint of thin gruel, and given as a drench. This medicine should be continued as occasion may require; for example, suspending it when the discharges are frequent and again resuming it when peristaltic action is tardy. In view of increasing cutaneous exhalation give an infusion of lobelia and pleurisy root, half an ounce of each to half a gallon of boiling water; when macerated sufficiently strain and add a gill of honey. Dose: One pint every four or six hours. When carried beyond a certain point large or repeated doses of medicine are sure to do harm, for this disease is located in tissues that are under the dominion of the nerves of external relation; these tissues may be highly excited and painful, in consequence of the congested state of the capillaries; at the same time the vital fluid—blood—is deficient in the region of the nutritive tissues. There is more danger in giving too much than too little medicine. Steam is very beneficial in treating rheumatism, but in case that is not obtainable the capillary absorbents must be excited with the following external application: Two ounces of spirits of camphor, one ounce of tincture of Indian hemp and four ounces of olive oil; mix and lubricate the stiff and painful regions daily, and cover them with flannel. The diet during the inflammatory stage should be light, consisting of sloppy mashes. Linseed tea and water, acidulated with cream of tartar, form the best drink for fever patients. The diagnostic symptoms of acute rheumatism are great pain, elicited by pressure or motion; swelling of the limb or body, as the case may be; febrile symptoms are present; some thirst; the urine has a very pungent odor; the pulse is full and and hard, peristaltic action is slow. The disease occurs very suddenly in subjects not far advanced in years; there are regular periods in the course of the twenty-four hours, from day to day, when the patient will be worse. In the human subject night is the period when the pains and fever are greatest; and in four-footed subjects, confined in ill-ventilated stables the same is noticeable. In many cases the disease leave the subject very suddenly or migrates to other tissues. The disease has been known to gravitate to the feet; it is then called acute laminitis—another name in the majority of cases for founder in its acut stage. The diagnostic symptoms, when the heart becomes affected, are palpitation, difficult breathing and great oppression. The symptoms are to be met by saline medicines and counter irritants.—Philadelphia Record.

An Appeal Which Was Heeded.

The Naples correspondent of the Standard telegraphs: Among the crowd awaiting a day or two ago, before the Royal Palace, Queen Margaret's return from her usual drive, a man was seen with a baby in his arms. On the approach of the Royal carriage he pressed a petition into the infant's hands, and threw both petition and child into the carriage. Her Majesty, though startled, caressed the crying infant, and took it into the palace. It was then consigned to a policeman, who soon found the father and took him to the police station. He turned out to be an ex-corporal of the "bersagliori," who, after twelve years' service, had been unsuccessfully waiting for some civil employment, and was now in the greatest distress with a numerous family. Several petitions of his having been without result, he contrived to obtain, through the original way he adopted of tendering this last one, and through the graciousness of Queen Margaret, pecuniary assistance and the promise that he should be provided for.

Art in Paris.

An inventory has recently been taken of all the works of art belonging to the city of Paris, and their total value has been appraised at £490,266, the civil buildings being estimated at one-third, and the religious edifices at two-thirds of the sum, the two churches of St. Eustache and St. Germain des Près containing works of art valued at £52,000. The Repository in the Boulevard Morland contains 69 statues valued at £15,560, while the sculpture upon the Hotel de Ville is valued at £55,860. The works of art placed in the parks, public gardens, and highways are valued at £40,000, about a third of this sum being the essential value of the monument upon the Place de la Republique. The collection of plans and diagrams, the library, and museum are estimated as worth about £120,000, and the contents of the 22 municipal libraries £25,000.

—Three Parisian manufacturers, who were detected in artificially coloring tomatoes to improve their appearance, have been fined for the offense.

After using three bottles, found myself once more a man, completely restored to health, with a hearty appetite and a gain in flesh of 18lbs. Call at C. GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life-giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

"A life on the ocean wave and a home on the rolling deep," it is all very well to sing about in poetic verse, but the poor sailors are subject to discomforts that we landsmen know nothing of, Jacob Palmer, mate on the U. S. S. Portland, writes that he never starts on a cruise without laying in a supply of Mishler's Herb Bitters. It is invaluable for diarrhoea, dysentery, colic, cramp, and all similar disease.

A little dot of a girl coaxed two nickels from her father on Thanksgiving day, saying she would use one for candy and the other she would give to the missionaries. Before executing her expressed intentions she lost one while at play, and running to her mamma, said: "Oh, mamma, I have lost my missionary nickel."

Clinton has a family of nine in which four generations are represented.

Editor Smith of the Adrian Record, being in danger of conversion by Capt. Kirk of the Salvation Army, shied himself off on another excursion. After two weeks hob-nobbing with the oil men of Ohio, Philander will be a harder nut to crack than ever. But Capt. Kirk should not despair. The game is worth the powder. If he can bring Philander down upon his marrow bones, it will redound more to his glory than would the conversion of ninety and nine ordinary sinners.

A new weather prophet has arisen in the East who rejoices in the euphonious name of Baldy G. Plunkett. Plunkett is a poetical name for it rhymes with tunket and junket. It is a musical name. It tickles the ear drum like a gentle peal of thunder rolling over a thistle patch, or like a black cat serenade on a neighboring woodpile at midnight. Plunket must be a wise man, for he is bald headed and is called "baldy" for short. It ought to be a truthful name for it begins with "P" the same as purity and piety and parson. Plunkett does'nt base his prognostications on the signs of the zodiac, nor on the cob-webs upon the lawn on a July morning, nor on the ant hills in a sand bank, nor on rings round the moon. He quietly holds his breath until the other prophets have promulgated a program and then, in genuine feminine fashion he prophesies exactly the contrary. It is safe to say that Plunkett has struck the right tack in the weather business. We are neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but we venture the prediction that Plunkett will very soon wear the belt.

THE BUSINESS SITUATION

The Saginaw Courier contains the following admirable review of the business situation:

The tenor of the reports that reach the Courier from the great Commercial centers of the country, indicate that business men are wearing brighter faces and that there is an actual improvement noticeable. This is certainly encouraging news. The exhibit of the clearing houses in the U. S. for the past week is fairly favorable and indicates a slow revival of trade at nearly every leading business point in the country. At Boston the gain in the demand for dry goods continues, as well as that for boots and shoes. Outside of New York, in the country at large, the clearings were $285,333,301, against $217,652,903 in the corresponding week of last year, and $205,961,301 in the same week ending August 1, 1885. Estimated on the basis of six business days this year, and they would have been $236,390,951, a gain of 13.2 per cent. The universal report is that collections are coming in fairly well. A year ago when the wheat crop was ready for the market, there was such an unsettled condition of things that the farmers would not sell unless compelled to by reason of crop mortgages. This year there is nothing to indicate excessive changes, and the result must be hopeful in general trade. The cotton crop promises to be large, and it is probable that they will get their material cheaper the coming year than heretofore. Of the iron trade the best that can be said is that it is no duller, and the coal market is still demoralized. Anthracite coal is more depressed than ever by the refusal of the Lackawana and the Reading companies to agree to a reduction of the excessive output arranged for August and for succeeding months. Some anxiety on this account is felt by the trade and buyers are more disinclined to stock up than ever. Stocks in the first and second hands are heavier than ever, and prices are very heavy. Of flour there is a very large supply, for which the demand is very limited. There is still a good tone to the lumber markets and prices are stronger. The curtailing of the production on the Saginaw River by reason of the strike has exerted a healthy influence on the Eastern trade and a lively fall business is anticipated.

The crop reports in the main are favorable, and the prices of stocks are remarkably well maintained. Traffic is on a firm basis, the mercantile class is for the most part in a solvent condition and we are now pretty sure of a steady forward movement.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

Good for Grover.

The letter of the President was so keen and caustic that many doubted whether he would have written it to a Democrat. The doubt is now set at rest by the statements by the President himself during his recent visit to this city. He not only wrote the letter, but rejoiced over it, and declared if he was misled much more by politicians in favor of unworthy applicants for places he would print the names of the politicians and let the public see how he was deceived into making improper appointments.—Albany Journal.

A Disagreeable Face.

Is it not disgraceful to the city and the State that in the first two weeks of the existence of the Monument Committee, when the death and burial of the Union Commander were likely to open men's hearts and purses, if they ever are to be opened, a paltry $37,000 only has been collected. And this in a city where people build residences at a cost of two or three million dollars and pay $400,000 for a yacht! Is there no patriotism and public spirit among the wealthy? Must the Grant Monument Fund be a repetition of the Bartholdi Statue of Liberty.—N. Y. World.

A New Weather Prophet.

A correspondent who frankly signs himself Baldy G. Plunkett protests against any credibility being given to the frequent weather prophecies of A. J. DeVoe, "Meteorologist." He declares that he has examined DeVoe's prognostications, and in one month he was wrong 27 times out of 30, in another he missed it 23 times out of 30, and again he was right only 4 times in 31. Mr. Plunkett even ventures to prophesy himself that the next ten days will be exactly opposite to the De Voe prophecy recorded in Wednesday's Sun, and if "I win more times than he, De Voe shall hand over the belt to me and shall take down his sign." The contest for the weather championship will be watched with interest, but from present appearances it looks as though De Voe would win.—N. Y. Sun.

A Wonderful Discovery.

Do not despise the trouble borrower. Be patient with his apprehensions and mindful of his fears. You may be entertaining an angel unaware. If your wife insists that you go once more before retiring to see if the door is locked, humor her. You may find a friend on the sidewalk with an invitation to take a walk around the corner, or the residence of some hated neighbor may be in process of combustion. But for your trouble borrowing wife you would be denied the pleasure either of accepting the invitation or witnessing the cheerful fire.

A case in point is that of Dr. Chas. Pinckney, of Georgia, who is described as "a man of fine learning and observation." Notwithstanding his profession and learning he is a trouble borrower, and seems to dream darkly, but let us not turn him away. It is not in green apple colic, mumps, failure of the watermelon crop or the coming tax day that the good doctor perceives danger. It is to far-off Panama that he turns his woful eye. His theory is that the rotary motion of the earth piles the waters of the Pacific so high against the shore of the Isthmus that the western sea is twenty-eight feet higher then its neighbor, and that when the canal is cut there will be a frightful rush of Pacific water into the unoffending Atlantic. This apprehensive medical man says the Pacific doesn't seek the lower level of the Atlantic around Cape Horn because that point of meeting is so far from the equatorial line that the centrifugal force is lost, and the levels of the two oceans are there the same. He also declares that the water of the Pacific is much colder than that of the Atlantic, and that when the rush of waters comes the Atlantic will get a cold bath that is certain to destroy the Gulf Stream and the cotton industry of the South.—Chicago Herald.

Coffee and Tea.

One of the most marked differences between English and Americans in matters of diet is in their relative use of coffee and tea. In Great Britain tea has long been the favorite, while in the United States coffee is preferred. The difference becomes constantly more striking. For some years past the consumption of coffee per capita has remained stationary or has fallen off in the United kingdom, while that of tea has been steadily increasing. In the United States, on the other hand, the consumption of tea has of late fallen off rapidly, sinking from 1.54 pounds per capita five years ago to only 1.16 last year, while the consumption of coffee has increased only less rapidly, until it now reaches about nine and a half pounds a year per capita. The English now drink five times as much tea as coffee, while the Americans drink eight times as much coffee as tea. The American Grocer is of opinion that the reduction in the consumption of tea in this country of late years is largely due to a falling off in the leaf, while the coffee trade has distributed the bean in a roasted rather than a green state more generally than formerly, which has enabled consumers to secure a more agreeable drink than when the beans were roasted at home in skillets or frying pans, as used to be the universal rule in the South. These influences have doubtless had some weight, but it is obvious enough from an examination of the statistics that people in this country are more and more coming to prefer coffee to tea on general principles.

THE ASHLAND IRON MINE.

A recent number of the American Manufacturer gives a description of the Ashland, Wis. Iron mine, in which Col. Hugh Richard late of Jackson, and formerly of Tecumseh, is interested. The same traits of character which made Hugh Richard a successful builder ought to achieve success for him in the mining business.

The last mine on the range, in Michigan, is the Ashland, one of the finest looking iron mines, judging from the quantity and quality of ore exposed, on this continent. They came pretty nearly taking out pure steel. This mine is on the south half of southwest quarter of section 22, and north half of northwest quarter of section 27, town 47, range 47. The average width of this vein is 35 feet and has been explored 750 feet in length. With the present developments, over 200,000 tons of ore are in sight. Here specular and hematite ore are found lying side by side, the blue ore being found next the hanging wall. Fully one half of the Ashland vein in one place is of this blue ore and carries 71 per cent. metalic iron. The average assay from this mine is 66 per cent. This ore runs as low in phosphorus and silica as any on the range. This vein is all clean ore, being absolutely free from foreign or country rock. There are five shafts, from 100 to 200 feet apart, down from 15 to 20 feet in pure ore. Cross-cuts are run from each shaft, excepting in No. 1. Superintendent Hayes calls them cross-cuts, but they are really drifts, as they are run for the purpose of mining the ore to better advantage. In about three weeks these folks expect to be taking out not less than 400 tons of ore a day. They start in with a force of 150 or more men. The first contract is 40,000 tons to Cleveland parties.

The New Postal Delivery Service.

The new special delivery system will go into effect on the 1st. of October and will be used in all cities having special carrier service and in all other towns of more than 4000 inhabitants.

For 10 cents in addition to the regular postage, anything that can be sent through the mails is put into the hands of special messengers and delivered at its destination forthwith, the only proviso being that the destination must be within the regular carrier limits, or if in a town not having the carrier system, within a radius of one mile from the postoffice. The new branch of the postoffice service practically furnishes to all the minor towns and cities the convenience supplied in the large cities by the American district, telegraph messenger service.

The towns in Michigan which get the new expedited delivery are, in order of their population at the last national census, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Bay City, East Saginaw, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Muskegon, Saginaw City, Port Huron, Flint, Lansing, AnnArbor, Adrian, Battle Creek, Manistee, West Bay City, Alpena, Ishpeming, Ypsilanti, Monroe, Grand Haven, Marquette, Coldwater, Pontiac, Ionia, Ludington and Niles, twenty-seven in all.

The measure farther provides that any bachelor who marries shall at once be exempted from the tax, while, to quote the language of the bill, "the good ladies of our good and grand old commonwealth are hereby earnestly requested to join the reformers and moralists of the country in order to correct this monstrous and ruinous evil which now stalks abroad in our Sunny South and would-be virtuous land.—Ex.

Quartermaster Rogers has had application for quarters from twelve different posts, representing about seven hundred veterans, distributed through six counties—Hillsdale, Jackson, Washtenaw, Monroe and Branch, and still the applications are coming. The "old vets" evidently mean to make this meeting a big success.

Milan was visited last Saturday, by a young couple from Adrian, on matrimonial purposes bent. The groom arrived on the 10:50 Wabash train from the west and the bride came in on the 11 o'clock T. & A. A. train from the south, and an obliging minister soon joined in wedlock, two happy souls, two hearts that beat as one and sent them on their way rejoicing. Evidently it was a runaway match, on account of the bride's inexorable parents.—Milan Journal.

The Press last week noted the disappearance from the city of E. J. Smith and Capt. Kirk, of the salvation army, at the same time hinting vaguely at the possibility of a duel. Smith has returned and the leader of the army is still missing, which seems to indicate that Smith was the better marksman. Meanwhile the sheperdless sheep are led by the captain's lieutenant. He does not keep the key while singing quite as well as the cap., but his double F's do not crack the paint on the brick walls. Of the two he ought to wear the crown.—Adrian Record.

The meeting of the Lenawee County Grange which took place at the Macon Grange Hall on Thursday last, was very largely attended and a most excellent program was presented. The exercises were given substantially as published in the HERALD two weeks ago. A sumptuous dinner was served at noon and the literary portion of the feast occupied the greater portion of the afternoon. In addition to a full attendance from the Macon Grange, about fifty visitors were present from other granges in the western and southern parts of the county. We regret that other business engagements prevented our attending.

The Gainsley stock of goods has changed hands and a new firm assume control of the same this week. The name of the firm is Sutton, Fairfield & Co. The senior member of the firm, Mr. N. M. Sutton, needs no introduction to this community. He was in the hardware business here for many years, and is at present the efficient manager of the Opera House. He has the necessary capital and go-ahead business methods to succeed in anything he undertakes. The junior member, Mr. Chas. Fairfield, is a former resident of Muskegon and a brother of Mrs. Ed. Tecumseh is well nigh deserted today. A large fraction of the population has gone to the big picnic at Devil's lake, and a good slice of the remainder take in the band tournament at Monroe.

There was music in the air last Monday night. The cornet band was on one corner and Knapps band on the opposite one, each trying to out blow the other. It was "nip and tuck," but they made good music all the same.

Money is scarce, times tight. Pay what you can; put the money in circulation: part of it may come back to you. Every cent started around to pay debts helps the community; it eases things up. Everybody who can should pay all debts, no matter how small, promptly, and the financial stress of many persons will be relieved.

If the administration would get up a surprise party for Mat D. Blosser, the able and live editor of the Manchester Enterprise, and send him a commission for the post-office at that place, said administration would do a worthy deed, and at the same time please the rank and file as well as the mug-wumps of the party. This is a suggestion merely.—Ann Arbor Courier. A very sensible suggestion however, and one which Mat's friends down in this latitude will heartily approve of.

John F. Hicks arrived home last Friday and will remain about a week. We understand that he contemplates selling out his teams and stock and retiring from the employ of the Howe Scale Co. He has an offer from the Fairbanks Co. to work for them on a liberal salary, which offer he is quite inclined to accept. Should he do so he will be stationed in the South and his headquarters during the coming winter will be at Galveston Texas. He would prove a valuable acquisition to the Fairbanks Co. in working up the Southern trade.

As this is the season for excursions, church societies, or parties of pleasure seekers who wish for an enjoyable trip will do well to examine the excursion circulars of the Star Line of Steamers running daily between Toledo, Detroit and Port Huron. Wilkison, agent for the Star Line, may be found or addressed at the office of the company in Toledo, and will make rates which cannot fail to be satisfactory.

Those people in Michigan who expect to attend the meeting of the American Pomological Society, at Grand Rapids, September 9, 10, 11, should apply for certificate for reduced fare to Prof. Wm. J. Beal, Agricultural college, Michigan; and enclose two stamps to cover postage and printing. Write him soon, that you may not be overlooked in the hurry of the last few days. Regarding exhibits of fruits, for information correspond with with E. H. Scott, Ann Arbor. Any fruit requiring cold storage will be cared for free if sent express paid to Wm. K. Munson, Grand Rapids, Mich., with a postal card to notify him.

CHAS. W. GARFIELD.

The following is a technical description of the new immediate delivery stamp: A line engraved on steel, oblong in form, dimensions one three-sixteenths by one seven-sixteenths inches; color, dark blue. Design on the left, an arched panel, bearing figure of a mail messenger boy on a run, and surmounted by the words, "United States," and on the right, an oblong tablet, ornamented with a wreath of oak and laurel surrounding the words, "Secures immediate delivery at a special delivery office." Across the top of the tablet is the legend, "Special postal delivery," and at the bottom the words "Ten cents," separated by a small sheild bearing the numeral "10."

The Hudson Gazette says: Adrian officers are as magnanimous toward their tramps as the city dads are toward local coal dealers. If they arrest one for vagrancy and find after a close examination of his pockets there isn't any profit in continuing the prosecution, they release him with instructions to get his dinner in Hudson.

We received this week a call from Mr. Custer, of Monroe, father of Gen. Custer, and found him a genial, pleasant old gentleman of 78 years, well preserved in health and intellect and a bright, genial vivacious guest. Mr. Custer takes great pride in the change of administration and extended warm congratulation on being able to meet an occasional democratic public official. He is the guest of Mr. El. Gray, of Tecumseh, for a few days, Mr. Gray having been on Mr. Custer's staff. Both took in the circus, and each were conjuring up some excuse to give to the ladies at home for doing so and we believe they finally settled on trying to find Col. Eldridge, it being absolutely necessary that they see him.—Adrian Press.

The combined picnic of the pioneer societies of Fairfield and Madison, held in Baker's Grove last Wednesday, was attended by about a thousand people, and the gray-haired men and women, with their children, enjoyed themselves to the fullest extent. H. C. Pratt made an address of welcome; and before and after the big dinner there were speeches by Ezra Cole, T. F. Moore, W. S. Wilcox; a well written history of Madison read by C. H. Bradish and of Fairfield by C. Quick; excellent original poems by Nathan Lowe, of Adrian, and Rev. Mr. Woodin, of Weston; recitation by Mrs. R. H. Whitney, an amusing account of the "Toledo war" by Rev. Gardiner, besides music by the Fruit Ridge glee club and Fairfield band. Rufus Baker was re-elected president, and N. J. Strong secretary.—Morenci Observer.

For some time past C. A. Conklin, the undertaker, has felt that his bin of oats was not holding out as it should, and he reckoned that at the present death rate the profits of his business would not allow him to bank a heavy sum if it cost so much to keep his team in grain. So he began to watch his barn. He was there in the dews of the early morning on several occasions, and discovered one reason of the lowering of his oat bin to be due to the visits of Peter Taxsold. This morning Mr. Conklin was at the barn lying in wait, when Mr. Taxsold appeared and filled a basin with grain and was about to depart when the undertaker sprang at him with a revolver and ordered him to surrender. He did so and was marched by Conklin and his son to jail. Before Justice Pavne Taxsold pleaded guilty, and the court sentenced him to the Detroit workhouse for 90 days.—Adrian Record.

THE MASONIC EXCURSION.

The bretheren of the "Ancient and Honorable order," who exchange the grip within the portals of Tecumseh Lodge No. 69, conceived the idea a short time ago that it might be for the good of the order to have a fraternal love feast at Devil's lake, before the excursion season should be over. A committee of arrangements was accordingly appointed and work began. The original intention was to fix the excursion about the first week in September, but as that would bring it in the fair season, the date was changed to the 18th inst. Tuesday. Invitations were extended to the Dundee, Manchester and Clinton Lodges to join with us, all of whom responded with alacrity.

The expectation was that about 300 tickets would be sold and a special train for that number was chartered from the M. & O. road. Mr. McHugh the Gen. Pass. Agent of the road came up to Tecumseh Monday evening and remained over night, and gave his personal attention to the making up of the train on Tuesday morning and running it to Devil's lake. On Monday it became evident that over 500 tickets would be disposed of and an effort was made to procure more cars. The M. & O. had six passenger coaches available and they tried to borrow some more cars at Toledo but failed. Four empty box cars were filled with seats and attached to the train at Tecumseh, and about nine o'clock the passengers were stowed in as comfortable as possible, under the circumstances, and amid the music of the bands the train moved westward. Over 600 persons were on board. The Dundee city band came up with the Dundee contingent, while Knapps full band and the Tecumseh Cornet band both went from here.

The train arrived at the lake about ten o'clock and halted at Allen's Devils Lake House, where accommodations had been engaged for the excursionists. The grove at Treadwell's Landing, which is run in connection with Allen's hotel was where the picnicers were to gather. Carriages, row boats and sail boats were at hand in abundance to convey the excursionists to the grove, and by eleven o'clock, most of the company had been transported. A large number however remained and took dinner at the hotel.

The grove is admirably arranged for a large picnic party, having plenty of tables and seats, a large platform for speakers at public meetings, a summer kitchen, ice house, ice cream rooms etc.

Between twelve o'clock and one the provision baskets were emptied, the tables were spread and the company was filled.

After the tables were cleared the three bands in attendance assembled on the platform and engaged in a blowing match of an hour or more, which was decidedly entertaining to the crowd. We venture to say that the shores of the Satanic lake never before echoed with a better brass band concert.

During the afternoon the company busied themselves in various ways.

The two large sailboats at Allen's and about forty row boats were all kept busy, while many took passage on the Little Devil and City of Hudson, and went over to the south side where they passed an hour or two at Beardsell's Lake View hotel. By five o'clock the excursionists had all returned to Allen's north shore house, and were patiently waiting for the train. It arrived from Addison at six o'clock. We venture to say that six hundred passengers with about twelve hundred provision pails and baskets never loaded themselves into a train more expeditiously. Some of them procured seats and some didn't, but the ride was a short one, and the inconvenience was borne good naturedly. The train arrived at Tecumseh about dark, and after halting for the west bound passenger proceeded to Dundee. The Clinton and Manchester parties went home on the evening Lake Shore train.

POINTERS.

The general greeting yesterday was, "Did'nt we have a splendid time?"

The company was properly ballasted with religious dignitaries. Rev's Phelps, Hudson and Getchell were there, accompanied by their wives.

The committee in charge consisted of John J. Orr, C. M. Burlingame, John F. Wilson, John R. Hialey and Jay A. Santus. They drew upon several other brothers for assistance but these five constituted the official committee.

Passenger Agent McHugh won many new friends by his efforts to promote the comfort of the excursionists.

The Dundee contingent formed a large slice of the entire company.

We never saw Master D. Woodward in a happier mood and that is saying a good deal for him.

Clinton and Manchester were both well represented and they all seemed to enjoy themselves.

The Dundee band furnished some splendid music.

Knapp's band and the Tecumseh Cornet boys vied with each other in their strife to produce the best music. It would be difficult for a non-professional to decide between them.

Dr. Finch & W. F. King of Adrian who were sojourning at Beardsell's visited the picnic grounds and were well entertained.

The ride from Beardsell's over to Allen's on the City of Hudson and its tender with the impromptu concert by Knapp's band, was one of the pleasantest features of the day.

Considering the unexpected size of the crowd, the M. & O. road did remarkably well in the matter of accommodations.

The grove at Treadwell's Landing is just the place for a party of this kind.

The weather couldn't have been pleasanter if the committee had obtained a permit direct from the weather office.

ANOTHER EXCURSION TO PUT-IN BAY.

On Monday next, Aug. 24th another excursion will be run over the M. & O. from Battle Creek to Toledo and Put-in-Bay Island. The following note to agents from Pass. Agent McHugh explains itself.

TOLEDO, Aug. 15, '85.

Please notify the public through your local papers, that we regret exceedingly our inability to accommodate them on the excursion which was given to-day. But that we will run another excursion train from Battle Creek to Toledo, Monday Aug. 24th, connecting with Star Line of boats for Put-in-Bay, and will provide accommodations for from 800 to 1000 people and the rates of fare will be considerably less than we made on to-day's excursion. B. MCHUGH.

Below is the time table with rates of fare:

Trains leave	A. M.	fare round trip
Battle Creek	5 30	$1 25
Jerome	7 22	90
Addison	7 38	85
Onsted	8 00	80
Tipton	8 11	75
Tecumseh	8 25	70
Ridgeway	8 35	65
Britton	8 39	60

Arrive at Toledo at 10 A. M.

The elegant side wheel steamers of "The Star Line" will be in waiting and will leave their dock immediately on arrival of the train, landing passengers at Put-in-Bay at 2.00 P. M. standard time. Returning boats will leave at 5.00 P. M., reaching Toledo at 7:30, thus giving excursionists a delightful ride of seven hours on Lake Erie.

Meals and refreshments will be served on board at reasonable prices. The excursion train will arrive and depart from steamboat dock at Toledo, thereby avoiding any transfer across the city. An excellent Band will accompany the boats from Toledo. Ample accommodations have been secured on the boats, and excursionists may rely upon finding sufficient room to enable all to enjoy the Lake ride. Train will leave on arrival of boat, delivering passengers at their homes at seasonable hours in the evening.

While at the Masonic excursion last Tuesday we took a spare hour in the afternoon to visit Beardsell's Landing on the South shore of Devils Lake. He has made many improvements there since last summer and he informed us that his patronage this season has been better than ever before. He is now pushing forward a large addition to the Hotel which will add twenty rooms to the capacity of the house. There are eight private cottages at Lake View. One owned by Mr. Hamilton and one by J. G. Perkins both of Hudson, one by Mr. Sorby of Addison; and the other five belong to Mr. Beardsell himself, which he rents out by the week. They have all been full from the beginning of the season. The veranda of the hotel has been widened to twelve feet which adds much to its attractiveness and convenience.

THE WHITE MAN'S FETISH.

An Interesting Experience in the Career of Mr. H. M. Stanley.

Mr. Stanley tells a characteristic story of the way in which he gained the respect and fear of an important tribe who positively refused his expedition a passage. As the chief, after angry refusals, was about to leave, the following prearranged comedy was played for his benefit:

"While standing near the tent door, for a moment irresolute, he caught sight of the large Chinese gong suspended from a crossbar supported by two forked poles.

"'What is that?' he asked, pointing to the gong.

"'It is fetish,' I answered, seriously.

"His young son, Kojeli, who was more mischievous than his father, whispered to him his belief that it was a kind of fetish, upon which Ngalyema cried out:

"'Bula Matari, strike this, let me hear it.'

"'O, Ngalyema, I dare not. It is the war fetish.'

"'No, no,' said he, impatiently. 'Bear it, Bula Matari, that I may hear the sound.'

"'I dare not, Ngalyema. It is the signal for war. It is the fetish that calls up armed men. It would be too bad.'

"'No, no, no! I tell you to strike. Strike it, Bula Matari,' and he stamped on the ground with childish impatience.

"'Well, then—taking the beater in my hand—remember, I told you it was a bad fetish—a fetish for war,' and as I lifted the beater high with uplifted hand I asked again: 'Shall I strike now?'

"'Strike—strike at, I tell you.'

"With all my force I struck the gong; the loud, bellowing tone sounding in the silence caused by the hushed, concentrated attention of all upon the scene, was startling in the extreme, but as the rapid strokes were applied vigorously, the continued sounds seemed to them like thunder. They had not recovered from the first shock of astonishment when the forms of men were seen bounding over the gunwale of the 'En Avant' right over their heads, and war-whooping in their ears. From my tent, and from the gorge behind them, a stream of frantic infuriates emerged as though from the earth. The stockaded was violently agitated, and finally collapsed, and a yelling crowd of demoniac madmen sprang out one after another, every one apparently madder than his neighbor. The listless, sleepy-eyed stragglers burst out into a perfect frenzy of action. From under the mats in the huts there streamed into view such a frantic mob of armed men, that to the panic-struck natives the sky and the earth seemed to be contributing to the continually increasing number of death-dealing warriors. Every native present, would-be friend and would-be foe, lost his senses completely. The seated warriors forgot their guns and fled before this strange deluge and awful scene. The ammunition bearers threw their gourds away—some were broken, and the powder and slugs were scattered over the ground, and as Ngalyema was standing paralyzed with fear, and with his faculties benumbed, I seized him by the arm, and said softly to him:

"'Be not afraid, Ngalyema. Remember Bula Matari is your brother. Stand behind me. I will protect you.'

"The Zanzibaris were now a yelling crowd in front of me, calling out tauntingly and menacingly:

"'Ha, ha Ngalyema! You came to fight Bula Matari, Ngalyema! Where are your warriors, Ngalyema?'

"There could not be a better representation of relentless, bloodthirsty fury than that which was shown by these amateur black actors in the suddenly improvised scene. Their assumed frenzy was the next thing to reality. Had I not been in the secret I also should have been duped, while the valor with which I defended my poor brother, who with his two hands grasped me round the waist, danced from side to side to avoid furious strokes from the wild-eyed men, while young Kojeli clung behind his father and followed his movements, reminded me of the long-forgotten play of hen and chickens.

"'Save me, Bula Matari, do not let them hurt me!' I did not mean anything,' cried Ngalyema.

"'Hold hard, Ngalyema!' I cried. 'Keep fast hold of me; I will defend you, never fear. Come one, come all! Ha, ha!' etc.

"But the camp was almost emptied, of our visitors much of the ammunition was left behind, the guns were strewn over the ground, and the play was well acted.

"'Enough, boys! fall into line!' and 'Silence!' was cried out by Selim, and his brother captains, and the obedient well-trained fellows fell into line at 'Shoulder arms!' with all the precision of military veterans. Then, as Ngalyema had allowed his hands to fall down by his side in mute surprise at the sudden transformation scene, I took hold of his two hands, and said, with an assuring smile:

"'Well, Ngalyema what do you now think of the white man's fetish?'

"'Ah, I was not afraid, was I? See, all my people are run away! Av me; such braves! Only Enieh and Ganchi left with me! But tell me, Bula Matari, where did all these people come from?'

"'Ah, that is the bad fetish I told you of! Do you want to see any more? Come, I will strike the gong again, and the next scene may perhaps be more wonderful still!'

"'What!' he shrieked, while he laid his hand upon my arm. 'No; no; don't touch it. Av, verily, that must be a bad fetish,' shaking his head at the round, innocent face of the gong."—From Mr. Stanley's New Book.

—It makes one feel foolish enough to have a horse snap at him on the public throughfare. Of course he isn't afraid, but he jumps, nevertheless, with a scared look overspreading his features; then he looks silly, and laughs an insipid little little laugh, as he reflects that everybody is looking at him; and it doesn't help the matter when somebody observes, as somebody inevitably does, that the horse was deceived by his greenness, and took him for grass. The only reason why he doesn't commit a capital crime then and there is because he doesn't know whether to kill the horse, or the man who made the verdant suggestion.—Boston Transcript.

MODERN VANDALISM.

Reverence for Beauty a Superficial Quantity with the Multitude.

In profession, we of to-day are all crusaders, burning to defend the places made sacred by the poetic genius or associations of the past. In deed, we are almost all Goths and Vandals, razing them without mercy. While the men who are to come, will judge by our actions, we judge principally by our words. Because the species of asiew is fair, we fancy that it must be right with the bugs. Because smoke is being and and wrath and [illegible] we think that the flying fire must be greater in place, or more than. In a word, we [illegible] one sowing of good seed for the harvest of a fruitful harvest. Unfortunately, however, we are not [illegible] that all is not so well as it seems. In the United States, within the last ten years [illegible] have been [illegible] by hundreds, but when it came to finding out what they are [illegible] [illegible] insulted, Harper and Brothers. The result was [illegible] in England [illegible] strong in the town [illegible] fine the lower classes [illegible] of art and by making their surroundings beautiful. But even as they put up their monuments in Whitechapel [illegible] collections of paintings are [illegible] to be dispersed, and [illegible] to destroy one of the most picturesque corners in London.

The fact is that the reverence for beauty, genuine though it may be, like Mr. Ruskin, is superficial with the multitude, whose real worship is comfort. Whenever there is a struggle between the things of the art and those of the present, it seems to predict which will survive. Usefulness is always measured by comfort. Perhaps, after all, where the birds fly and cities in which people live are concerned, it is unreasonable to wish it to be otherwise. I may be as Hawthorne says somewhere in Marble Faun, in speaking of the gloom and cold and inconvenience of lofty [illegible] in Italian cities, that a dwelling-house should never be built to last longer than forty or fifty years. It is probably more important that a house should be healthy and [illegible] and adapted to the physical well-being of men who are to spend their days in it than that it should give mental pleasure to those who merely look at it from without. Workingmen living in the ugly suburbs of London, or in the red brick notoriety of Christian and Catharine streets in Philadelphia, which no man would go out of his way to look at, are doubtless better off than their fellows in Italian towns, though the latter may be settled in two or three large, damp rooms on the ground floor of old palaces which travelers come from afar to see. The few—a losing remnant in this case—overlook the wants of the people. Considering the subject dispassionately, we must admit that many of the changes which are fatal to mediæval beauty and quaintness are not wholly [illegible] or capricious. No one, while the memory of last summer's plague is still fresh, can deny, for example, that it is better to sacrifice the picturesqueness of some of the narrow, dark streets of Naples than the health and lives of thousands of Neapolitans. The majority of business men in London do not question the wisdom of the removal of Temple Bar, which has made their going to and coming from the city so much easier. It must be added, however, that those whose occupations do not lead them cityward wonder what great good has been done by destroying an old landmark, declared to be an obstruction in the street, and then looking up the way with a new, meaningless monument.—E. R. Fenwick, in Alternative Monthly.

CHARITY.

Discrimination Imperative in Giving to the Poor.

In giving to the poor, discrimination should be exercised. Our duty is not discharged when we have given them something, simply because we have given. All interested in the work of charity know that it is not nearly so advisable to give money to the needy as it is to lay the money out judiciously for them. It is not, however, of money-giving that I would write, but of garment giving. Many people are accustomed to give half-worn or outgrown clothes to the poor, without stopping to consider whether they are suitable for the person to whom they are given. How often have we seen poor people, who can scarcely keep starvation from the door, arrayed in silk and embroidery. The moral effect of this is very bad. Here is a case in point. A washerwoman, with a drunken husband and five children, for whom she must provide, received numbers of garments from families by whom she is employed. Many of these clothes were beautiful, fit for children of wealthy families. They were given to the washerwoman because the children of the donors had outgrown them. The washerwoman, proud of her pretty children in their fine attire—poor woman! the motive prade is pardonable, for mother love is God's gift to all, rich and poor alike—spent what she should have saved for food for things to suit the rich apparel, so that her children might [illegible] those of her neighbors. Remonstrance was unavailing. Years passed by, and the children, grown old enough to help their mother in her hard and weary life, became millstones to the poor woman. They would do nothing and had no thought save for finery. To-day they are a pest to all with whom they come in contact. The foolish mother, worn out by labor, has only one comfort in life, and that is a daughter who was so marred by small-pox that the mother always dressed her in the commonest clothes, "because she is so awful homely," and seldom took her out for the Sunday afternoon walk. When the child did go it was only to look after the younger children. This daughter now takes charge of the poor home, saves the mother many an insult and injury from the wretched father, and works indefatigably to keep the family under shelter. — Louisville Courier Journal.

ALL IN THE TREATMENT.

Large Varieties of Plants the Result of Judicious Manuring and Proper Culture.

Every year many persons pay large prices or are at great pains to secure varieties of currants, asparagus and rhubarb or pie-plant, which they see in nursery grounds or in the garden of their friends. Sometimes they see specimens in the hands of agents, and give orders for a supply for planting in their own grounds. Quite likely they have all these things growing, but they want better varieties of them. It does not occur to them, and of course the agent does not inform them that they now have the very kinds they are ordering, and that the difference between what they have and what they wish is entirely due to the judicious application of manure and proper culture. Such, however, is generally the case. By using a sufficient quantity of well-rotted stable manure, applied at the right time, and by giving the soil the working it requires, the stalks of asparagus and pie-plant may be made exceedingly large. These plants are very gross feeders, as might be expected when we take into consideration the circumstance that a portion of their growth is cut away every two or three days during several months of the season. Most kinds of plants would be killed outright by this sort of treatment, and these will only thrive well by supplying them with material to reproduce the portions that have been removed.

The currant bush is as gross a feeder as the rhubarb or asparagus plant. It will retain its life, make some increase in size, and produce some fruit if it stands in poor soil, is surrounded by grass and weeds, and receives the benefit of no fertilizers. But its growth will be very small under these circumstances, and the fruit will be inferior in quality and very small in quantity. The common red Dutch currant is a very good variety and is distributed in all parts of the West. It was planted near old Fort Dearborn, which was located near the mouth of the Chicago River, and cuttings taken to various portions of the Western States. A supply of currant cuttings can be obtained in almost any neighborhood for nothing or for the trouble of pruning the bushes. Their increase into the dimensions of bearing bushes and their productiveness will depend almost entirely on the amount of manure that is applied to them. If some of the bushes are planted where the soil is very poor and the ground is allowed to grow up to grass and weeds, and others are placed where the soil is naturally rich, is kept well supplied with manure and free from weeds and grass, the difference will be so great between them in a few years that a stranger would conclude they belonged to distinct varieties.

Large stalks of asparagus and pie-plant sell much more readily than small ones, and customers generally think that their quality is better. Large currants are more salable than small ones, and the quality of currants is ordinarily determined by their size. The larger currants are the greater is the quantity of juice that can be expressed from a given amount. There are as many seeds in a very small currant as in a very large one. It is much easier to gather a bushel of currants if the clusters are long and the berries are large than if the reverse is the case. If currants are very large they are admirable to eat without being cooked. Only bushes that are in a good growing condition will produce large crops of fine fruit. Their growth will depend chiefly on the amount of manure that is applied to them. The early part of the fall is the best time to apply manure to currant bushes and to asparagus and rhubarb plant. Well-rotted stable manure is as good a fertilizer as can be found. If applied near the surface of the ground the soluble portions of it will be carried about the roots by the fall and spring rains. The application of manure in the fall will cause the bushes and plants to commence growing as soon as the frost has left the ground in the spring.—Chicago Times.

INCREASE OF MANKIND.

The Prospective Progress of the Working Classes During the Next Century.

The great English statistical writer, William Giffen produced a recent paper on "The Progress of the Working Classes," which he introduced with a brief general survey of a number of very valuable statistics concerning the comparative progress of different parts of the world, and especially of the different countries of Europe, during the last hundred years. The researches of a French statistician, M. Moreau de Jonnes, have made this possible; and from the carefully compiled tables of that writer Mr. Giffen is able to show such significant facts as these: That the population of Europe has increased in a hundred years from 145,000,000 to 350,000,000, or, if the people of European race settled out of Europe be added, to 420,000,000; that the English race has multiplied fivefold, the Russian fourfold, the German two-and-a-half-fold, and the other races of Europe in a smaller proportion, Italy having nearly doubled, and France and Spain having added only about fifty per cent. to their population in a hundred years. The actual effects of these varying rates of increase upon political power are obvious; and still more obvious is their prospective effect. Circumstances may modify the result to a certain extent, but on the whole there is not much reason to doubt, as Mr. Giffen puts it, that "in another century there will be nearly 800,000,000 of the British race (with the German blend) in the world; while the Russian race, apart from conquest, will not exceed 300,000,000, and the others, increasing more slowly still, will lag far behind." France a century hence will probably number about 42,000,000 against 36,500,000 now, and Spain 22,000,000 against 17,000,000 now, and Australia 30,000,000 to 3,000,000 now.—Chicago Tribune.

—Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes is of the opinion that "bad air, bad whisky and irregular habits keep the doctors alive."

MURRAIN.

A Prevalent Sheep Disease and a Suggested Remedy.

Sometimes young and thrifty stock is attacked by what is popularly called murrain. Old and poor stock seldom suffer from this cause. The times of its occurrence are the spring and early summer and also in the fall. Usually it appears when the season is wet and the pasture grows rank and is watery. The sheep eat too much of this pasture and overtax the digestive machinery. From indigestion the blood becomes affected, and often before any trouble is suspected the sheep suddenly die. Usually the wool leaves the skin by simply touching it, after the animal is dead, and the body is found often to be swollen and blackened in patches, especially on the forequarter, flank and hindquarter. Air gathers beneath the skin, and a post mortem examination will reveal decomposition, and the body will be filled with black blood. The mouth and tongue, and sometimes the eyes, are inflamed. There is constipation; the urine is dark and the droppings are bloody. The symptoms, of course, differ somewhat in different animals, and sometimes sheep die with this trouble that have few or none of these marked symptoms.

The disease rarely appears on hilly ground, or on soils that are gravelly and dry. Rich bottom lands are favorable to its development. Prevention lies in avoiding a sudden change from poor to rich food or from rich to poor food, and in unceasing regularity of feeding. The first thing to do when the sheep are attacked is to administer a purgative. Give the following in oat meal gruel: Sulphate of soda, two ounces; flowers of sulphur, one ounce; powdered myrrh, one scruple. Six hours afterward give a teaspoonful of nitrous ether in a pint of water. The powders that we so often recommend for indigestion and blood difficulty, will prove excellent: Charcoal, sulphur, saltpeter, golden seal, gentian and May apple root, a half pound each, and copperas a quarter of a pound. This prescription corrects the digestion, reaches the kidneys, clears the liver, gives tone to the system and purifies the blood. It is an excellent preventive of disease, and a most excellent remedy. As we have sometimes said before, however, it will be found that oil meal, without anything more, will often prove all that a sheep may need to aid digestion and to help the bowels perform their functions. We can not too strongly recommend oil meal, while sheep are on dry food. If fed this judiciously, they will be in much better shape to change from dry food to grass than they usually are without it. Try it another season.—Western Rural.

TRICKS IN THE STABLE.

Vicious Habits Which Idle Horses Are Apt to Acquire.

Among the tricks or rather habits acquired by horses in the stable, resting one shoe upon the other hoof, lying in the gangway, rolling in the stall, and kicking are among the worst. In the first place, the horse, if suddenly startled, is apt to bring the resting foot down suddenly, often seriously injuring the coronet. The remedy is a boot covering the part likely to be injured. Lying in the gangway may be prevented by placing a bale or rope behind the horse, preventing him from backing up. Standing in the gangway may be prevented by the same means. Rolling is the most difficult to cure. The most feasible plan is to keep the skin of the horse free from sweat and dirt, which induce itching; and also to allow the animal to roll in soft ground when sweaty and tired. A roomy stall, with sides standing slanting up to the perpendicular walls, will also prevent this, but a box-stall will be the best preventive. Severe strains of the loins, even fractures of the hip bones, and other disabilities, are often the result of rolling in the stall. Lying in the stall, at the extreme length of the halter, results in strains and sprains in the attempt to rise.

Kicking is one of the worst vices to which a horse can become addicted. If the habit is not inveterate it is cured by hanging a sack well stuffed with hay so it may strike the animal in the rebound from the kick. Let him kick this innocent dummy until he is tired. Then he is apt to quit for ever. A horse that kicks from being touched by the whiffletree or other substance touching him should be immediately taken out of the vehicle and allowed to kick until he becomes tired. The whiffletree should be padded so as not to seriously injure him. It may then be lowered so as to touch his heels when he moves. When he ceases to kick he is generally cured entirely. The remedy may seem severe, but a kicking horse is worthless, because always most dangerous. In lieu of the whiffletree a sack stuffed with hay may be suspended so it will touch his heels in the stable. But a confirmed kicker should be sold to work in a heavy team where he can not do much injury.—Chicago Tribune.

Mummies' Eyeballs.

The most curious things are mummies' eyes—petrified eyes—which are usually to be found in the graves if one is careful in digging. The Incas have a way of preserving the eyes of the dead from decay—some process which modern science can not comprehend; and the eyeballs make very pretty settings for pins. They are yellow, and hold light like an opal.—Lima Cor. N. Y. Sun.

—To rebuke politely requires both a good spirit and a sharp intellect. Those who are continually thrusting unasked advice upon persons about their private affairs deserve rebuke. Not far from New York lies a fine estate, occupied by an old gentleman. On it, near the mansion, is an old building. Said an officious neighbor: "Mr. ——, why don't you tear that old house down and put up something handsome?" The old gentleman merely looked at him and said, "This place is not for sale"—an effective and polite way of saying, "Please mind your own business."—Christian Advocate.

Health, Wealth and Happiness

Are more intimately connected with a sound stomach and good condition of the blood than most people suppose. Thin blood means a weakness, languor and misery. A dyspeptic stomach means all the horrors you can think of. Brown's Iron Bitters enrich blood, good digestion, healthy appetite, sweet sleep and vigorous strength. Mr. Henry Hallam, South 17th street, St. Louis, says, "Brown's Iron Bitters relieved me of dyspepsia, purified my blood, and gave me an appetite." Thousands of others testify in the same way.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (shipsmithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it, do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 525 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

The Magazine of Art for September.

Mr. L. Alma Tadema contributes the frontispiece to the September number of The Magazine of Art. The picture is taken from the original in the Grosvenor Gallery, and is called "Who is it." Three girls are on the top of a house and one is peeping over the rampart to see who is coming. The design is a little out of Mr. Tadema's usual style, although it still portrays the classic maiden of ancient Greece. Another page picture is "Unvalued Liberty," from the original by Kaulbach—an old monk has opened the window of his cell to let a bird fly from its cage, but the bird prefers captivity with the old friar to liberty without him. "The Secret" from Mr. E. Blair Leighton's Royal Academy picture is given another page. We have a monk in this too, a monk to whom a dying man is telling his secret in the hope of being forgiven. Harry V. Barnett continues the controversy on "Drawing in Elementary Schools," and the editor contributes a lively paper on current art, with illustrations from the principal pictures in the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Gallery.—Cassell & Company, Limited, New York, $3.50 a year.

OBITUARY.

So absorbed are we in the cares of life, that we scarcely pause to give a thought to what is beyond until we are brought face to face with the realities of death and the future. Our neighbors sicken and die and we drop the tear of sympathy or speak a word of consolation at the time, and in a day are forgotten, and it is not until we ourselves are called to pass under the rod that we fully sense the deep, bitter grief that fills the soul of those who are bereaved.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. Sarah L. Osborn nee Whitlemore, was born in the city of New York in 1836, of English parents. In 1838 she came to Michigan and was married to Mr. H. A. Osborn in May 1853, since which time she has resided in this state. There was born to them of this union three living children, two of which, a son aged 12 years and a daughter aged 8 years, survive their mother, while one dear little girl many years ago passed over to the other side. Mrs. Osborn was baptised into the fellowship of the Tabernacle Baptist Church of New York in 1854, when but 14 years of age. She removed her membership to the first Baptist Church, Tecumseh, when she came to Michigan to reside, from which it has never been removed to any other church.

As a neighbor and a friend she possessed qualities rarely equaled for fearlessness, sympathy and devotion, ever ready to give a helping hand to those in trouble; as a wife she was at once loving, faithful and kind; as a mother sincerely attached to, and ever anxious for the welfare of her family. Some four months ago she was taken with what at the time was supposed to be an aggravated case of dyspepsia. She was attended by the best physicians, but the difficulty did not yield to treatment and for some three months she grew slowly but steadily worse. At last she determined to return to her old home and secure the aid of physicians who were better acquainted with her constitution, hoping this would gain relief. In this she was disappointed as before. The disease baffled all medical skill and on the 4th day of August she passed suddenly away. While we grieve at her departure, we are glad to think that she has a large circle of loved ones on the other side, among whom are a kind father and a dearly loved mother waiting to welcome her into everlasting habitations.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Mrs. Dr. Adam went to Tecumseh last Friday to visit her daughter, Mrs. Henry Stevens.

Miss Mina Muir went to Detroit last week.

Miss Libbie Newcomb, of Blissfield, visited her sister, Mrs. J. T. Clark, over Sunday.

Chas. Fisk and family returned to their home in Detroit Friday last.

Prof. Laflin and family and Miss Ida Fullerton returned last week.

Miss Nellie Kishpaugh is visiting friends in Dundee.

F. D. Lancaster went to Toledo last Monday.

Mrs. Albert Wilkerson, of Dundee, has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Peter Kishpaugh.

Miss Addie Parker, of Ypsilanti, is spending a few days at David Woodwards.

Mrs. Josie St. John went to Detroit last Friday to visit her brother, Stewart VanDeMark.

Mrs. Frank Silvers and children, of Tecumseh, spent a couple of days here last week.

J. R. Sterling arrived here last Thursday night and returned to Detroit with his family, Saturday.

J. E. McCollum received a telegram last Saturday stating that his brother, Emmet McCollum, was very sick at Jackson. Mr. McCollum and his wife took the night train for that place, and his brother returned with them Monday. Dr. Tuttle pronounced his case to be heart trouble.

Last Thursday afternoon E. R. Smith was boiling linseed oil in Muir's slaughter house and the air becoming so close inside, he went out and had left the building but a few seconds when the oil exploded, and in twenty minutes not a vestige was left of the slaughter house, or its belongings, excepting the iron kettles. Beside the loss of about one hundred gallons of oil, Mr. Smith will be at the expense of rebuilding the slaughter house, so that the experiment has proved a dear one.

Last Friday morning the house occupied by Eugene Palmer was struck by lightning. It did very little damage to the house, and none of the inmates were injured, though all were considerably frightened.

During the heavy rain storm last Monday lightning struck Thomas Tate's barn a few miles east of here. The building and all its contents were burned to the ground.

Edgar Rose arrived from Detroit Tuesday for three or four days visit.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Miss Flora Woodward, of Hillsdale, and Miss Bertha Brown, of Hudson, are the guests of Mrs. E. A. Woodward at Lewis' place.

Ed Cleveland and J. H. Lane spent a few days in Chicago last week.

"Lady Russell," the mammoth short horned cow owned by Mr. H. B. Lauderdale, of Lyons, Ohio, was on exhibition at the farmer's picnic last week and was the center of attraction for dairy and stock people. The animal is five years old; measures 16 feet from tip to tip and weighs 2,500 pounds. She reminds us of a stuffed mastodon we saw in an eastern museum years ago.

J. K. Boies and John Palmer were in town Thursday of last week.

John Schneider, of Toledo, spent last week in the vicinity of Addison, and took in the Farmer's picnic.

Avery Swartout, of Jackson, has been resting up for a few days with his parents in this place.

Grandma VanVleet, of this village, is now in the eighty-fourth year of her age, and is as hale and spry as a girl of sixteen. We are informed that during one year of her early life she made 100 pounds of butter, dried 1,200 weight of apples, spun and knit fifteen pairs of socks and did the chores and her housework, besides attending to the wants of a sick husband. Who beats this record or says that our ladies are being killed by work?

Geo. R. Beach and family, of Hudson, are rusticating at the lakes this week. Mr. B's ad of organs and sewing machines appears in another column. Read it.

We are in receipt of specimen pages of a new book on the life and deeds of General Grant, written by Frank A. Burr, of Philapelphia. The work is concise and readable.

We hereby acknowledge the receipt of a complimentary ticket to the fourth annual fair of the Brooklyn Fair Association to be held Sept. 8, 9, 10 and 11, together with premium list of the same. The rules and usages are admirably adapted to the purpose designed, and the association is now generally recognized as a permanent institution.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Sunday was rather a dismal day.

More rain is needed to help the ploughing.

Mrs. Louis Priest is very sick at present.

Mr. C. L. Waring is home on a visit for a few days.

Mrs. Hiram Swift, of Ypsilanti, is visiting her brother, Mr. Samuel Rappleye.

Rev. Peter Sharp filled the pulpit Sunday morning, and there was no service in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Griffith, of Dundee, spent the Sabbath at Mrs. Cheever's.

Miss Eva Willett, of Blissfield, sister of Prof. H. C. Wilson, spent a few days at the home of Mr. W. R. Wilson last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Luckin, of Detroit, have been visiting Dr. D. W. Loree and family for the past few days.

It was Miss Jennie Gordeneer instead of Miss Johnnie Gordeneer as appeared in our correspondence of last week, that accompanied Mr. Arthur Kelley and Miss Ida Arner to Adrian week before last. If it was our blunder that the mistake was made, we beg the lady's pardon.

Mr. and Mrs T. H. Montgomery went to New York State last week to attend the funeral of his mother.

For various reasons the Lawn Social that was to come off this week Friday evening, was postponed until sometime next month. Due notice and full particulars will be given in time.

Mrs. F. W. Fox, of Dundee, visited Mrs. Morris Kelly last week.

We are glad to report W. H. Arner on the gain, but slowly.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The usual routine of work, infelicity, idle speculation of the Macawber brand, and a horse-race, have made up the week; but the latter waked more people from chronic lethargy than all the rest combined. During an era of universal inertia, doing something even amiss, breaks monotony, for in spite of preaching, naughty is preferred to nothing by the wicked. Folks skurried round telling everybody that a mile had been trotted in three twenty; and then gathering round the water tank bets on what would be done at the fair bubbled freely, and caused an adjournment. The Fair had apparently been set away to cool weeks ago, but three-twenty brought it into prominence, and now people are sure to have a balloon, or space to locate one. If the tramps now in White's woods could be induced to parade, the Wild West would be cheerfully omitted. They are a hideous clan and troublesome neighbors. Where such types of inhumanity come from none can guess, but Butler, Ind., is a Mecca to which hosts of them pilgrimage. Lake Shore and Wabash trains bring contributions of wandering vagrancy hourly and no offer of employment tempts this class of great unwashed to forego out-castry. They lean against front doors and blockade windows until driven away; crouch among roadside weeds, lurk in wood-sheds or under bridges, but they can't sortie round back doors, for residents wisely dispense with them. Yet these men could earn one dollar and ten cents per day if they would. High wage places are mostly occupied, but section men on the Wabash are in good demand at the above named price, which can be made the basis of a fair amount of independence, and the stepping stone to something better in a few weeks, when increased freight and travel creates a higher labor market. Butler is far larger and less cleanly than Brooklyn, though the Aldrich Hotel is the cleanest public house I ever saw. It has some good buildings, but church bell music is drowned by engine whistle or lost in smoke, and long trains of cars laden with coal, cattle, and all products known to inquisitive people, make visitors imagine its railroads the world's chief paths.

DEVIL'S LAKE DOINGS.

The last number of the Morenci Observer contains the following item about the recent improvements at the lake. "As some of our readers are not familiar with the many new features about Devil's Lake, mention might be made of a few of them, and the most important would be the new hotel lately erected by J. B. Allen, which was opened to the public the 3rd of July. It is a substantial structure 36x80, four stories in height, including a basement, and located on the new M. & O. railway, on the north side of the lake. It is well provided with all the modern conveniences, and contains some twenty sleeping rooms, with dancing hall above. A half mile to the right from the hotel, by wagon road, Mr. Allen has fitted up a picnic grove, and some sixty new row boats have been provided for pleasure seekers. A more desirable spot could not have been found on the lake for seekers after rest and recreation, inasmuch as it is accessible by an accommodating and well-equipped railway. Some substantial business enterprises are being contemplated there, such as the erection of a new grain house, etc., while Toledo parties are about putting up, at the edge of the lake, mammoth ice-houses for the storage of the fine ice which this lake produces. And we must not forget to mention that our friend, Hope Welch, occupies a commodious room in one corner of the hotel, with a choice stock of groceries. He will always be happy to meet any of his numerous acquaintances in this part of the county.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Dora Crum is visiting at Benj. Kelley's.

Byron Begel has gone to Hanover for a little vacation.

Dr. Nelson, of Ridgway, made Dr. Begel a friendly call last Saturday.

W. J. Holdridge and Abbott Smith are repairing the town house. There seems to be a determination on the part of the board to put a stop to people wintering their hogs in there. Well, let the good work go on.

Watermelons are plenty in town, and the Doctor wears a broad smile in anticipation of a little cholera morbus to liven up business.

W. J. Scott is just now the happiest man in town, and it is all about a boy that put in an appearance there Monday morning.

A goodly number went on the excursion last Monday over the M. & O. They report a good time with plenty of seasickness, and yet we are glad to say that they all brought back their false teeth, which was better than some did, as one lady left hers in Lake Erie.

H. E. Wilson and wife have gone to Tennessee on a prospecting tour. They write home that it is a beautiful country and seem very well satisfied with the country in general.

THE CARPET BUG PEST.

The carpet bug is a pest that has appeared in some localities to vex the spirit of the enterprising housewife. The insect is a rapid multiplier, and is very destructive to the carpet, on which he subsists till it is literally ruined. His taste, too, is decidedly æsthetic with a positive preference for brussels and ingrain, particularly the latter. Turn up the edge of the carpet in a neighborhood infested by him and you will find him there together with his wife, his children and his mother-in-law. Uncovered from their concealment, the whole family scamper toward the wall, whither, if permitted, they secret themselves in the cracks, and laugh at the hired girl who essays to crack them with a hammer. If perchance a tardy member of the tribe fails to escape the blow of retribution, he is so well nigh intangible as to leave no remains—not even a grease spot to mark the point where he perished. The carpet bug is not easily extinguished by the usual methods applied to the extermination of similar pests. His constitution resists moth preparations, and he laugheth at helebore and skipeth gaily about his business. Tear up the carpet and he will attack the clothing on the wall, or in the closet or drawer. In the most secret recesses, behold he is there, pursuing his work of destruction. He glides backward or forward with equal ease and agility. The only way in which to cope with the carpet bug, is to lay bare his secret resorts and "go for him, with hammer and tongs," particularly the hammer. Otherwise he will destroy any fabric in the room. Seen under the microscope, the carpet bug is a formidable looking monster. His normal full-grown bulk is about half that of the common house-fly, but he can do business at any age of his life. The magnifier reveals him to be as ugly a looking nondescript as was ever seen in a menagerie, his hog-shaped body bristling with a growth of black, stiff hair, which under the glass stands out like the quills of a porcupine in war panoply. But he is terrible in appearance only under the microscope, his formidability consisting solely in his capacity to destroy carpets. In some parts of Michigan this household pest has compelled the taking up of carpets altogether.—Exchange.

CHARLEY ADAM.

ANOTHER WORD FROM WIGGINS.

Wiggins, the Canadian weather prophet, sends the following contribution to the Detroit Free Press, which that journal prints in its issue of Sunday last:

In a recent issue of your journal you say I have predicted that next winter will be unusually mild. This is news to me. With the great planets, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, all so near their perihelion, a mild winter for 1886 is an absolute impossibility. In fact the extremely cold weather now prevailing in the southern hemisphere teaches a lesson of an opposite signification. Unusual proximity of the neighboring planets to our earth invariably means cold. When our moon is in perigee, and especially at the time of her conjunction, the temperature falls, and this is increased when our second satellite has a similar relative position. The old theory that the nearer a planet is to the sun the hotter it is is absurd. The opposite is the fact—the colder it is! All planets must increase in size and attractive power, either by meteors falling to their surface or by the increase in the number of their satellites, which must mean that they are gradually receding from the sun. Our earth is much further from the solar orb now than she was at the glacial age, or when our visible satellite first appeared in the Silurian eras, and Saturn is much more distant than when he carried but a single moon in his then smaller race-course around the sun. Then as the four great planets just mentioned are so near to us their attraction forces our satellites nearer our primary, thus increasing the attraction on our earth's surface, and as a result densifying our atmosphere. It was for this reason I predicted in the New York Insurance Times three years ago that the winters and summers of 1884 and 1885 would be remarkable for their coldness, for the depth of snow in winter and the rainfall in summer, and how exactly this prediction has been fulfilled! As the same conditions will, to a certain degree exist, it is impossible that the winter of 1886 can be otherwise than cold and stormy. This unusual atmospheric density is the primary cause of the cholera in Europe; for those noxious gases, consisting of the poisonous compounds of carbon, are more quickly generated, and rise to a higher atmospheric level than usual, especially in low countries and in cities badly drained and ventilated.

I have made no predictions as to storms or temperature excepting the following storms, which I published in the New York Herald on May 10, 1884, viz: September 26 and 30, 1885; March 26—29, 1888, and September 12, 1887. The last named will be the greatest storm at Halifax, Quebec and Boston that will occur for the remainder of the century. It is the great storm of October, 1869, known as the Saxby storm, which was attended by a tidal wave, and committed such sad havoc on the eastern coast of North America. On the 17th and 18th perfect calm will prevail over the greater part of the continent, the air-current at Halifax, what little there may be, moving from the west. At 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 19th (September, 1887), it will suddenly shift from the southeast. No one unless told would imagine that this quiet shifting of the flag on the mast, and the smoke from the chimney top indicates the beginning of a storm, which, in four hours, will become one of the greatest storms of the century, and one that will be spoken of by other generations. The New York Maritime Register stated in 1881 that my prediction of the storm of September 14, of that year—the one in which the Asia was lost on Lake Huron with a hundred souls on board—saved $8,000,000 worth of United States shipping; but this will be a heavier one, and much more dangerous, on account of its Atlantic tidal wave.

E. STONE WIGGINS.

OTTAWA, Ont., August, 1885.

The Quiver for September.

The appearance of the magazines that make their rounds as regularly as the seasons roll, remind us of the flight of time more forcibly than does the almanac. Here, for instance, is the Quiver for September, which reminds us that the Fall months are close upon us. The frontispiece of this number gives us a young girl coming through a long field which she has "cut across" to meet the postman, who has brought her a long expected and evidently satisfactory letter. "Side Paths and Quiet Retreats" is the title of the first article, which carries us along through beautiful country lanes, and inspires us with the wildest desire for a day's tramping. For week day reading there is an unusual amount of fiction, the continuation of the interesting serials, besides a number of shorter serials and poetry. There are plenty of illustrations, and take it for all in all, the number is exceptionally attractive. Cassell & Company, New York, $1.50 a year.

TECUMSEH, MICH., AUG. 27, 1885.

"PAST MERIDIAN."

"Past noonday! Oh how sweetly
Fall those words upon my ear,
When the continued shade from God me
My redemption draweth near.
Yet my soul hath in it a weary,
Long half wearied with every care;
And the hour I have longed for like a burden
Bears on me with weight of care.

What to me the mythic spectre,
Death ever stalks behind
Thrice a passer-by has beckoned
And spared as he hurried on.
Past noonday! Yes, the sunbeams
Lingering through the chamber
But my shadow falls behind me
With a lengthened shade of care.

Even seasons have to pass away
Morning, noon, and then the eventide.
Give a rest to every [illegible]
In the afternoon [illegible]
Past noonday! Yet a little while Patient, I bind my sheaves
With the gold and silver tissue
Which the loom of wisdom weaves.

To my treasure-house I bear them,
Daily adding to my store,
And when death's angel strength shall fail me
I will sit and count them over,
Calmly waiting for the summons:
"Come thou weary pilgrim, come,
All thy toils on earth are ended,
Bring thy gathered harvest home."

MY VEILED CLIENT.

How I Escaped Complicity in an Audacious Imposture.

At the time of the incident I am about to relate, I was a young solicitor, with no very considerable practice, and therefore not always so discreet as I might have been had I been able to pick and choose my clients. My business hours were ostensibly from ten to five, but the fact of my house adjoining the office made me subservient to the wishes of the public beyond the time stated on the brass plate at my office door. In fact, it was generally after business hours that my most profitable clients came; and though I say I refused many a time the agency of some shady business, still I must confess with regret that once or twice I found myself unwittingly involved in transaction which I would have much rather left alone. One of these I have occasion to remember too well, and I can never think of it but I thank Providence for saving me from becoming an accomplice unwittingly in a most audacious piece of imposture.

I was interrupted one night at tea by the servant entering and saying that a lady wished to see me. Hastily finishing the meal, I hurried into my business room. As I entered and bowed, a lady rose, made a slight courtesy and remained standing. I begged her to be seated, and asked of what service I could be to her. It was a little time before she answered, and then it was in a nervous, frightened way, glancing round the room as if she were afraid somebody else was present. I saw that, although she was dressed in good style, she had not the air of a lady; but, as she wore a thick veil, I could not distinguish her features, though I made out a gray hair here and there.

"I suppose I had better explain who I am and what I want," she began. "I am a Miss Howard, of Graham square, and I want you to make out my will."

I started involuntarily, for this elderly person, though I had never seen her before, had been the subject of many a surmise and many a gossip with the neighbors. She was reported to be very wealthy; but had apparently abandoned the world, for, during the last five years she had shut herself up in her house, seeing no one but her servants. My curiosity was therefore piqued at the idea of making out this old eccentric's will. Taking up a pen, I asked her to give me the particulars of how she wished the property disposed of.

"That is very simple," she said. "I wish my whole property to go to Mr. David Simpson, of Stafford street here. I have never been married, and I want the will framed so as to cut off any heir who might claim relationship to me. I also wish you to act as my executor in seeing my will carried into effect."

I made a note of the instructions, and asked when it would be convenient for her to call and sign the deed.

"If you could have it written out by to-morrow night, I could call then and sign it. I would like if you could arrange to have a doctor present to be a witness to my signing—a young doctor, if possible."

"Certainly, madam. To-morrow night at this time will suit, and I will arrange about a doctor being present. Is there anything else you wish mentioned in the will?"

"No; nothing," she said, rising. "But be sure you make it so as to cut off all relations."

I assured her everything would be as she desired; and after assisting her into the cab which was waiting, noticing the while that she had a slight limp in her walk, I retired to my study to frame the will in accordance with her instructions. Next night, punctual to a minute, she called; and as I had a doctor present, the ceremony of signing was soon over, the doctor signing as a witness along with my clerk, and appending a certificate of sanity, as desired by my client; and the deed was consigned to my safe.

The affair had almost completely passed from my mind, when I was startled one morning by receiving a note from Mr. Simpson, the legatee in the will, informing me that Miss Howard was dead. I immediately proceeded to the house, performed the usual duties devolving upon a solicitor in such circumstances, and made what arrangements were necessary. After the funeral I had a meeting with Mr. Simpson, and explained to him the position of affairs—that he was sole legatee, and that I was executor. He seemed to take the matter very coolly, I thought, but was anxious that everything should be realized as soon as possible. Our interview was very short, and I came away with a strong feeling of dislike for the man, which I found had acted as a sort of foil for the deceased lady.

Being within the duties of my executorship, and also with a desire to find out if possible the relations the old lady had been so anxious to cut off, I inserted a notice of her death in most of the leading newspapers in the kingdom. This had the desired effect; for, in the course of a few days I was waited upon by a young gentleman, Edward Howard, who informed me he was a nephew of the late Miss Howard, and had called upon me, having got my name and address from the office of one of the newspapers to which I had sent the advertisement. During my interview with Mr. Howard, I was much impressed with his bearing, on my telling him the position of affairs, as he was much more concerned at his aunt's death than at the purpose of her will. He told me that five years ago he had married against his aunt's wishes; she had refused to recognize his wife, and though he had written her several letters, he had never heard from her in reply. He thanked me for my information, and said he would likely see me again, as he was coming into town to a situation he had just been offered.

Some weeks after this, as I was returning home in the evening from a consultation, my attention was arrested by the figure of a woman in front of me. She was hurrying along as if trying to escape observation; but there was something in her style and the limp which she had that struck me as familiar, though I could not remember where I had seen her. Just as she was passing a lighted part of the street, she happened to look around, and the face I saw at once explained to me the familiarity of her figure—both face and figure being an exact counterpart of my late client's, Miss Howard! Somehow or other, a suspicion flashed across my mind; my instinct told me something was wrong, and I determined to follow her and see where she went to. Pushing my hat well over my brow and pulling the collar of my coat well up, I followed through two or three streets, and was almost at her heels when she suddenly turned into a public-house, when, so close had I followed her, I heard the attendant say, in answer to an inquiry by her: "Number thirteen, ma'am;" and I saw her disappear into the back premises. I immediately followed, heard the door of number thirteen shut, and glancing at the numbers, quietly opened number twelve, and after giving an order for some slight refreshment to the attendant who had followed me, I took a hasty look around the room.

I found it was divided from the next one only by a wooden partition, which did not reach the ceiling, and that, by remaining perfectly quiet, I could hear that a whispered conversation was being carried on in the next room. The entrance of the attendant with my order disturbed my investigation; but on his departure, and regardless of the old saying that listeners seldom hear anything to their own advantage, I did my best to make out the conversation. I distinguished the voices to be those of two men and one woman. The latter I at once recognized, or at least my imagination led me to believe it to be the voice of the person who had called on me a year ago to make her will. The voice of one of the men was strange to me, but after the discovery I had already made, I was not greatly astonished at recognizing the voice of the other man to be that of Simpson, the legatee in the will. The whole thing flashed upon me at once, and I saw I had been made the innocent machinery for carrying through a clever and daring piece of imposture. I, however, listened attentively to the conversation, in order to fathom the whole affair.

The first sentence I made out came from the stranger: "I told you young Sinclair was the very man to do the work for you. These young lawyers never ask any questions as long as they get the business."

"Well, well," said Simpson, "that is all right now. But the present question is, what is to be done in the way of hurrying him up with the realization of the estate without exciting suspicion? The sooner we all get away from this the better. I am glad that young fellow Howard didn't ask any questions. But one thing's certain, we must get the old woman away from this immediately or she's sure to get recognized. She's been keeping pretty close lately, but I dare say she's getting tired of it. Aren't you, old lady?"

"Indeed," was the reply, "I would be glad to get away from this place to-morrow, if I could. I'm sure I only wish you could have been content with half of the estate with Mr. Edward, instead of burning the will, when you found it was to be divided between you and him, and getting me to do what I did. I'm sure it's a wonder my mistress doesn't rise from her grave to denounce us all."

"Keep that cant for another occasion, old woman; it's no use getting religious now. But I'll tell you what—I've got an idea."

Here the conversation got so low that I could not catch more than an occasional word, and what that idea was I never found out, as he never got the chance to try it on me, for I had heard enough to know that next door to me were three of the most daring conspirators I had ever come across, who had duped me, and made me, though unwittingly, the chief actor in the conspiracy. My first idea was to lock the door of the room they were in and go for help; but as that was likely to cause a disturbance, I determined to slip out and trust to being back in time for their arrest. As luck would have it, nearly the first man I met outside was a detective, whom I had known very well in connection with some criminal trials in which I had been engaged. A few words explained my purpose; and signaling to the nearest policeman he placed him at the door of the shop and both of us walked in. He nodded familiarly to the bar-tender and, leaning over the counter, whispered in his ear. The shopman started and gave vent to a long, low whistle.

"You'll do it as quietly as you can, for the credit of the house," said he.

"Of course," said the detective. "Show us in."

In another minute we were inside the room, with our backs to the door, the detective dangling a pair of steel bracelets and nodding smilingly round the room. The woman fainted. We had no difficulty in securing the men; and in half an hour we had them safely housed in jail.

Before their trial came on, we had worked out the whole story. The woman who had called on me and signed the will was Mrs. Simpson, Miss Howard's housekeeper, the mother of Simpson in whose favor the will was made; and the other man was a lawyer's clerk who had suggested to them the feasibility of such a scheme. The fact of Miss Howard's self-confinement and my own imprudence had nearly made the plot a success, but for my accidental recognition of the housekeeper. Each of the prisoners offered to turn Queen's evidence; but, as we had no difficulty in proving the case, this was refused, and they were sentenced to various periods of penal servitude. I had then the pleasure of handing over the estate to the rightful heir, young Edward Howard, who, notwithstanding that I had nearly been the means of depriving him of his inheritance, made me his agent.

The estate turned out to be much larger than I had at first thought, as I succeeded in proving that a large number of investments in Simpson's name really belonged to Miss Howard, and the management of so large a property fairly put me on my feet as regards business. I have had many good clients since then, but I have often thought that my Veiled Client was my best one, as she was the means of giving me my first lesson in prudence, and my first start in life.—Chambers' Journal.

A CLIMBING CRAB.

One of the Curiosities of the Island of Sumatra.

Another curiosity of these regions is a climbing crab, which is one of the largest of its species, nocturnal in its habits, and not nearly so often seen as the others.

It makes in the ground deep tunnels, larger than rabbit-burrows and lined with cocoanut fibers. It has a habit of climbing the cocoanut palms, but whether to take the air or for temporary lodging is doubtful. It does not rob the trees, however, as is charged against it, since it feeds only on fruits that have fallen. One of its pincer-claws is developed into an organ of extraordinary power, capable, when the creature is enraged, of breaking a man's limb. The inner edges of the claw are armed with a series of white enameled denticulations, whose resemblance to teeth is singularly close, even to the irregular scarlet line below them which might pass for gums. It feeds on the nuts almost exclusively, using its great claw to denude the nut of the husk surrounding it and to get at the eye of the nut, which it has learned is the only easy gateway to the interior. Of the three eye spots at the end of a cocoanut only one permits an easy entrance. The crab does not waste its energies in denuding the whole nut, and it never denudes the wrong end. Having pierced the proper eye with one of its walking legs, it rotates the nut till the orifice is large enough to permit the insertion of its great claw to break up the shell and triturate its contents, whose particles it then carries to its mouth by means of its other and smaller foot. From this nutritious diet it accumulates beneath its tail a store of fat, which dissolves by heat into a rich yellow oil, of which a large specimen will often yield as much as two pints. Thickened in the sun it forms an excellent substitute for butter in all its uses.—Henry Forbes' New Book.

BALKY HORSES.

A Cure Not Usually Effected by Whipping and Cruelty.

Balking is not natural to horses, indeed they know nothing about it until they are brought into it by improper management, and when a horse balks it is generally from mismanagement, excitement, confusion, or from not knowing how to pull, but seldom from any unwillingness to perform his duty.

High spirited, free going horses are the most subject to balking, and only so because drivers do not properly understand how to manage. This kind of free horse in a team may be so anxious to go that when he hears the word he will start with a jump, which will not start the load, but give him such a severe jerk in the shoulders that he will fly back and stop the other horse. The teamster will continue his driving without cessation, and by the time he has the slow horse started again, he will find that the free horse has made another lunge and again gone back, and now he has them both badly balked, and so confused that neither of them knows what is the matter, or how to start the load.

Next will come the slashing and cracking of the driver's whip, till something is broken, or he is through with this course of treatment. It takes a steady pressure against the collar to move a load, and you cannot expect him to act with a steady determined purpose while you are whipping him.

Almost any team, when first balked, will start kindly if you let them stand five or ten minutes as though there was nothing the matter, and then speak kindly to them and turn them a little to the right or left, so as to get them both in motion before they feel the pinch of the load. But if you want to start a team that you are not driving yourself, that has been balked, fooled and whipped for some time, go to them and hang the lines on their hames, or fasten them to the wagon so that they will be perfectly loose; make driver and spectators stand off some distance, so as not to attract the attention of the horses, and unloose the check reins so that they can get their heads down if they choose; let them stand a few minutes in this condition till you can see they are a little composed.

When you have them ready to start, stand before them, and as you seldom have but one balky horse in a team, get as near in front of him as you can, and if he is too fast for the other horse, let his nose come against your breast; this will keep him steady, for he will go slow rather than run on you. Turn them gently to the right without letting them pull on their traces, as far as the tongue will let them go, stop them with a kind word, gentle them a little and turn back to the left by the same process; as you turn them again to the right, steady them in the collar, and you can take them where you please.

If you want to break a horse that has long been in the habit of balking, you ought to set apart a half day for it. Put him by the side of a steady horse, have check lines on them, tie up all the traces and straps, so that there will be nothing to excite them. Do not rein them up, but let them have their heads loose, walk them about as slow as possible, stop often and go to your balky horse and gentle him; do not take any whip about him, or do any thing to excite him, but keep him just as quiet as you can; he will soon start off at the word, and stop whenever you tell him.

As soon as he performs right, hitch him to an empty wagon and have it stand in a favorable place for starting. It would be well to shorten the stay-chain behind the steady horse, so that if it is necessary he can take the weight of the wagon. The first time you start them do not drive more than two rods at first; watch your balky horse closely, and if you see he is getting a little excited stop him before he stops of his own accord, caress him a little and start again, drive them over a small hill a few times, and then over a larger one, all the while adding a light load. This process will make any horse pull true.—Cleveland Leader.

EASTERN BEGGARS.

Mendicancy as Practiced in Northern Persia.

Here in rich and happy America we know knothing of begging as it is practiced in less favored lands. To know this disagreeable experience in all its fulness, we must cross the ocean and travel in Ireland, Spain, Italy, but more especially Asia; then we shall be less inclined to complain at our few home-made mendicants.

Here is a description of what a recent traveler was forced to encounter from professional beggars in Northern Persia:

"On leaving my caravanserai," he says, "I thought I was rid of the mendicants and dervishes who had beset me, but I soon discovered my mistake. Taking short cuts across the field, they had posted themselves at different points of vantage along the narrow path, from which they had not only recommenced their importunities, but almost made use of physical force to arrest my horse. There were dervishes with beards stained of a fiery-red color, and wearing queer conical hats, who, if they did not regularly belong to the howling sect of Constantinople, most decidedly showed themselves qualified for admission to it by the fashion in which they yelled, screamed and groaned, exhorting me in the name of the blessed Ali and the Imans Hassan and Hosseih, not forgetting Hazret Abass and many other holy people, to give them charity. Then there were the old, the blind and the lame—men, women and children—hanging on to my stirrup and seizing my bridle. Some were horribly deformed, and it seemed marvelous that they should have undergone such apparently frightful disasters as were necessary to reduce them to their ther present mutilated condition, and yet continue to exist. They seemed to consider that in my supposed quality of hadji on my way to Meshed I must be bursting with the desire to distribute all my worldly property to the first comers who might think fit to ask me for it."—Youth's Companion.

AN EYE FOR COLOR.

The Colored Man Who Had a Notion to the Artistic Fitness of Things.

Dan. W——, one of our best known and most fashionable scions of Afric's sunburnt race, entered Hill's livery stable, at the Seven Corners, on Monday evening. Some half dozen loungers were laddi g down the available chairs in the office, thinking about nothing, and occasionally giving vent to the results of their cogitations by word of mouth.

"Mistah Hill," said Dan, "I'se always been a good customah of dis heah stable, haint I? Got all my rigs to de las' two yeahs, I b'leve."

"Certainly, Dan," returned Mr. Hill graciously.

"Well, now, I tell you what I done want, Mistah Hill. I'se gwine ridin' wif my gal dis evenin' an' I want jes' abouts de toniest rig you'se got in de shop."

"All right, Dan," said Hill, "your desires shall be fulfilled to the letter. Sam, bring out the white mare and put a gold-plated harness on her. Bill, run out that red-geared side-bar rig there and see that there isn't a speck of dust about it. Now, you Tom, you get that yellow lap-robe with the brown dog's head on it, and that nice ivory-handled whip of mine. You bet, Dan, we'll send you out in such shape that your friends on the Gold Coast wouldn't know you."

The spectators sat silently watching the preparations, while Dan stood polishing his shiny silk hat, now and then casting an anxious eye at Hill. Finally everything was ready, and with a hearty slap on Dan's back, Hill said: "There, old boy, just climb into that, and you can bet your life that there won't be another colored girl in St. Paul that will go driving in any such style this week."

"Well, jes' hol' on a minnit, Mistah Hill," said Dan, rather dubiously, "I'se 'fraid dat won't sexsely do fo' dis chicken."

"Well, here's gratitude for you, I must say," returned Hill. "Here I swell you out with a rig that half of my white customers couldn't get, and you've got the gall to say it won't do. What do you mean by such talk, anyway?"

"Now, jes' wait a secon', Mistah Hill, till I spla'ns dis ting; p'raps I'se mistaken, ah' may be it's all right; but jes' tell me now, hones', ain't that mare white?"

"Why, of course she's white."

"An' ain't dat buggy red?"

"Certainly it's red."

"An' dat 'ere lap-robe, it's kinder yaller, ain't it?"

"Looks a little that way, I'll admit," said Hill.

"Yes; an' de dog on de lap-robe he looks pretty brown, don't he, Mistah Hill, an' de whip's jes' a little green, ain't it, Mistah Hill?"

"Why, of course; what of it?"

"Well, it's jes' dis way, Mistah Hill, you see, I'se purty consid'ble black myself, an' my gal—well, she's what you might call a beautiful rich molasses color; an' I'se 'fraid, Mistah Hill, dat a red buggy, wif a yaller robe wif a brown dog on it, wif a green whip, all hitched to a white hoss, wouldn't exackly ha'monize wif a black niggah an' a mola-sses-kulled gal, Mistah Hill, an' so if you kin jes' kin'ly gimme de ole bay horse an' de black buggy, I specs it would mo' kinder ha'monize wif my ecstatic taste, Mistah Hill."

Mr. Hill admitted his mistake, and the gentleman was provided with what he wished, and drove off amidst the applause of the spectators. Hill has determined to take up the study of color as applied to out-door decoration before proceeding any further with the livery business.—St. Paul Herald.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.

Their Influence on Diet in Old Age and During the Period of Inactivity.

Another agent in the combination to maintain for the man of advancing age his career of flesh eater is the dentist. Nothing is more common at this period of life than to hear complaints of indigestion experienced, so it is affirmed, because mastication is imperfectly performed for want of teeth. The dentist deftly repairs the defective implements, and the important function of chewing the food can be henceforth performed with comfort. But without any intention to justify a doctrine of final causes, I would point out the significant fact that the disappearance of the masticating powers is mostly coincident with the period of life when that species of food which most requires their action—viz., solid animal fiber—is little, if at all required by the individual. It is during the latter third of his career that the softer and lighter foods, such as well-cooked cereals, some light mixed animal and vegetable soups, and also fish, for which teeth are barely necessary, are particularly valuable and appropriate. And the man with imperfect teeth who conforms to Nature's demand for a mild, non-stimulating dietary in advanced years will mostly be blessed with a better digestion and sounder health than the man who, thanks to his artificial machinery, can eat and does eat as much flesh in quantity and variety as he did in the days of his youth. Far be it from me to undervalue the truly artistic achievements of a clever and experienced dental surgeon, or the comfort which he affords. By all means let us have recourse to his aid when our natural teeth fail, for the purpose of vocal articulation, to say nothing of their relation to personal appearance; on such grounds the artificial substitutes rank among the necessaries of life in a civilized community. Only let it be understood that the chief end of teeth, so far as mastication is concerned, has in advancing age been to a great extent accomplished, and that they are now mainly useful for the purposes just named. But I can not help adding that there are some grounds for the belief that those who have throughout life from their earliest years consumed little or no flesh, but have lived on a diet chiefly or wholly vegetarian, will be found to have preserved their teeth longer than those who have always made flesh a prominent part of their daily food.—Sir Henry Thompson, in Popular Science Monthly.

THE AVERAGE GIRL.

A Philosophical Dissertation Upon an Interesting Topic.

It is now confessed that cause affect all things, and that a sparrow lives under the laws of the universe just as truly as that Dante or Webster is the expression of his period. The girl of today is therefore a new form of human nature because new influences can not but bring about new shapes of character. The girl who is enjoying to the full the liberty of education and best form of American social and home life is really an object to be admired. Her vivacity, her industry, her wit, her taste, her kindness are, such as to compel the notice and admiration of an anchorite. The liberty and equality which are the cardinal ideas of the country have helped the modern girl away from servitude just as truly as they have helped the slaves to escape the old yoke which they and their fathers had worn for centuries. The daughter of fifteen can converse with her father and mother and mature friends. Fear has departed without taking away modesty and without bringing in a reign of egotism and disrespect. Terrorism was always a blemish in society, whether it existed between man and servant, husband and wife, or parent and child. Force is the law of brutes, and hence terrorism belonged to the brute kingdom and came into man's world in times when the wall was not high between the animal and the human.

The educated girl of to-day overflows with affection toward her parents. Sharp words, fearful recrimands, are unusual. The child so fully desires to do what the parent wishes should be done that the home-life is a constant flow of companionship and affection rather than the eternal reign of authority.

The girl of to-day, with rare exceptions, is industrious and with a breadth of invention and execution. The ironical and often mean essays on the woman of the present picture her as good for little except for accompanying a Saratoga trunk on its wanderings in summer and for filling fashionable engagements in winter. Much of this sarcasm is deserved by the few, but when the millions of girls are thought of as they are ornamenting their mothers' homes in the villages and cities, the honest heart can not but confess that the word "girl" never meant more than it means to-day. This being when found in her best estate can go gracefully from her silk dress and piano to a plain garb and to work among plants or to the kitchen, or to a mission school class. Nothing any longer is beyond her. In the city she can easily walk three miles. Languor has ceased to be fashionable; sleep in the daytime not to be endured. The soul is thought to be action, not repose.

All can contradict these words of praise; because all who think a moment can find exceptions in girls who are always just dead with a headache, or as averse a mummy to any kind of conversation or activity; girls who are pleased with nothing and nobody. These exceptions are so disagreeable that they seem to mar the whole world and make the beautiful characters invisible. In matters of this kind one can only offer opinions. One dare not assert with confidence. At a popular summer resort where quite a number of these sixteen-year mortals were met and observed daily, it appeared in evidence and in common fame that to be full of obedience toward parents, of kindness toward all persons and things, to be industrious, to be full of inquiry and rational talk, was not the exception, but the average of condition.

Why should a few girls of marked vanity and of giggling tendencies cast into reproach that multitude whose hearts are as innocent as the June flowers and June birds? Much of the ruin in character comes in the later years of woman when the impudence of late dancing, late suppers and the mental anxiety and perhaps sorrows which come from the vain efforts of the heart to create a paradise of pleasure away from duty, make the cheeks fade early and the eye lose its luster in the morning like a sun that goes behind clouds before noon. As for noble girls of sixteen, the Western Continent is full of them. They are in the cities, in the villages, in the farm-houses. We meet them on all streets, along all paths, in the lonely and lovely country. They are ready for all duty and happiness, and constitute to all us older and fading hearts the most beautiful and divine scene on earth.—David Swing, in Current.

THE PROFESSION.

A Woman Who Was Guilty of Unprofessional Conduct.

In driving out into the country on the Grand River Road a few days ago, a Detroit lawyer encountered a horse and buggy driven by a woman. As she was driving on the wrong side of the road he made up his mind not to give up his rights. As a consequence the two horses finally came to a standstill with their noses rubbing each other. The lawyer stared at the woman, and the woman stared back. Then he pulled a newspaper from his pocket and began reading. In a minute she had her knitting out and was industriously at work. Ten long minutes in a broiling sun passed away, and the lawyer looked up and asked:

"How long are you going to stay here?"

"How long are you?"

"All day."

"And I'll stay here a whole week."

He read and she knit for another ten minutes, and then the lawyer called out:

"Do you know that I'm a lawyer?"

"I don't care for that," she replied; "I'm the wife of a Justice of the Peace."

"Oh—ah—excuse me, madam. Really, but if I'd known you belonged to the purfesh this would not have happened. Take this side, madam—take the whole road!"

"Oh, no, no, no! I'm sorry I detained you. Here—drive on, and excuse me if I have been guilty of unprofessional conduct."—Detroit Free Press.

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system, carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

"I sold in two years thirty-three thousand one hundred and twenty (33,120) bottles of Hunt's Remedy. It is a valuable medicine for kidney diseases." W. B. BLANDING, Prov.

Hunt's Remedy is purely vegetable, and a speedy cure for heart disease and rheumatism.

"Nil desperandum"—never despair. While there is life there is hope. The trade mark of Mishler's Herb Bitters is an anchor with the word Hope. The emblem is justified by the marvilous cures that have been wrought by this great medicine in so-called "hopeless" cases of asthma, rheumatism, kidney and liver troubles, bronchitis, sick headache and kindred diseases.

Our English Cousins.

LONDON,—In a recent trade mark suit it was shown by sworn evidence that over nine millson bottles of St. Jacobs Oil had been sold here during the past few years. Leading chemists certify that the sale of this remedy exceeds that of all others; and that it is being recognized as the best pain-cure ever discovered. In serious rheumatism it has accomplished astonishing results.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.
Issued Every Thursday Morning
BY S. C. STACY.

[illegible]

TECUMSEH, MICH., AUG. 27, 1896.

The crowd at the Farmers' picnic last Thursday was so great that it was almost impossible to see anyone.

New York's million cedar monument is forging ahead. Nothing is needed now to make it an assured success, except the money.

The Chicago Herald claims that weather prophet Wiggins has gone into the coal business. He predicts a winter that will bury last year's record of 1 under ten feet of snow.

Scratch a Democrat, who is making wry faces at President Cleveland, and in nine cases out of ten you will find a man who has tried to get an office he was incompetent to fill, and got left.

After a lengthy struggle for the site of the Soldiers' Home, Grand Rapids has finally carried off the prize. The competition has been very lively, but the decision will be generally acquiesced in as a wise one.

The Ohio man is happy again. A third ticket is now in the field, and politics will wax red hot from now until election day. The average Ohio man is never wholly happy except when rooting in political turmoil.

The small-pox is spreading in Montreal, but it will not attack any American bank defaulter. Their skin is too thick. And in this connection it may be well to admonish the local health authorities of all Michigan towns to prepare themselves for a visitation of the scourge.

The Detroit Free Press of Monday is authority for the statement that important changes are imminent in the editorial staff of the Post, and that Tom S. Applegate, of Adrian, may be summoned to the helm. The stockholders of the Post could certainly go farther and fare much worse.

The outgoing tide of defaulting bank cashiers to Canada has ceased. Last week a Montreal cashier with a grip-sack full of money turned up in New York. The contraction of the currency having stopped, the balance of trade having set in our favor, we can now look for a revival of business prosperity.

Wiggins has been heard from at last. He was elected President of the Devils Lake Farmers' Association last week. This Wiggins is the efficient representative from the second district of Lenawee County, who lives in the town of Adrian. At the risk of being over inquisitive, we would respectfully enquire whether the Hon. W. H. Wiggins is related to the weather prophet?

The hot weather in Washington has been a practical blessing to some poor people. So great was the heat that asphalt pavements melted, and when sparrows, robins, blackbirds and swallows alighted in the streets they stuck fast and after remaining there an hour or so were nicely broiled. In this way the bum officeseekers who didn't believe Cleveland meant what he said before election and rushed down to Washington last spring have been able to get something like a square meal once in a while.—Chicago Herald.

Ex-State Oil Inspector Smith is in trouble. He has lost his knife. His common, every-day, ever faithful jack-knife—the companion of all his solitary joys and the partner of his skating rink frolics, the solace of his lonely hours, and the sharer of his bologna and sandwiches. And the knife is not exactly lost either, but just gone before. "It has been pawned, soaked, 'put up' by some galoot," Smith says, "at Earl Strong's tobacco store, for two cigars of great value, to-wit, ten cents."—Adrian Times.

We deeply sympathize with Bro. Smith over his loss. That jack-knife was his constant companion on the press excursion. It picked the bones out of his Macinaw trout at Traverse City, pared his oranges and bananas at Charlevoix, scared the darkey waiters into submission and obedience at the Arlington, whittled relics from the sail boat on Little Traverse Bay, dug pebbles out of the beach at Petoskey, and beheaded the fleas that disturbed his slumbers on the City of Traverse. The wretch who purloined that knife should feel the full rigor of the law. He should be arrested, tried and convicted, quartered and cored, and sent to the girls industrial school with the utmost dispatch.

THE FARMERS' ANNUAL PICNIC.

An Immense Crowd at Devils Lake Thursday to Celebrate the Event—An Interesting Program—Election of Officers.

If the farmers of Lenawee and Hillsdale counties had searched the almanacs for months they could not have set a better day for their picnic than yesterday. The weather was warm with a cool refreshing breeze which made traveling delightful and as early as five o'clock in the morning, conveyances of every conceivable size and shape were seen on the road wending their way towards Beardsley's Landing, Devils Lake, which the M. & O. had taxed to carry hundreds on their excursion trains. The young man from the country with his lou, linen duster and best girl was there, as well as the venerable pioneer and family. As one drives in from the highway down the lane that leads to the grounds the first thing that attracts his attention is the large number of horses hitched around the adjacent fields resembling, as an old soldier remarked, "an encampment of an army," and as he enters the grove he comes across the ever present "toy balloon man," the "lifting machine," striking machine, "lemo" stands, and all those side show attractions that are to be found at large gatherings of every kind. About one mile of tables were spread in the grove for the accommodation of the picnickers and an army of farmers and their wives and children sat down to partake of the good things thereon. The lake was covered with row and sail boats, while the "City of Hudson" and "Little Devil" were busy all day transferring crowds back and forth from the M. & O. depot. It is estimated that between nine and ten thousand people were on the ground during the day, and about 1600 teams passed through the gate to the grove. Two bands of music, the North Adams and Wheatland, were present to enliven the occasion with some excellent music and everyone seemed to enjoy themselves to the fullest extent.

About half past one o'clock the exercises of the day were begun by the President of the association calling the multitude of people that were gathered around the stand, to order, to listen to a selection from the glee club, of Hudson, which was admirably executed, followed by a prayer by Rev. J. H. McLane, of Hudson. The secretary then read the minutes of the last meeting, showing that the receipts of last year amounted to $374.48 and the expenses were $232.30, leaving a balance on hand of $142.18, which minutes were approved and adopted. Resolutions were read on the death of I. E. Phelps, of Medina, and adopted.

The president then welcomed the people present in a few words, congratulating the farmers on the success of their meetings and the amount of progress made in the last fifteen years in agricultural pursuits, and the great improvements in the implements used. Then followed singing by the glee club. Hon. N. B. Eldridge was next on the program for an address, but not being present, the address of Rev. J. H. McLane, of Hudson, further down on the program, was substituted. Mr. McLane spoke principaly on the subject of hired help on the farm, claiming that if the farmer expected to get a big day's work from a man they must feed him so he can do it.

The glee club then favored the audience with another selection, which was the last one they could sing as the organ was only rented for an hour and had to be carried back at that time. Miss Florence Hawley rendered that favorite old piece, "Barbara Fritchie" in an eloquent and entertaining manner, the North Adams band played a selection and then an address by V. H. Lane, Esq. was listened to. L. H. Salsbury, Esq., of Adrian was next on the program for a speech but was not present, neither was J. H. Tolford with his song, nor Miss Bell Carson with a recitation, and Prof. Spross, of Lansing being present, kindly consented to fill the gap by playing two cornet solos, which were finely executed.

The meeting then proceeded to nominate and elect officers for the following year, which resulted as follows:

Pres.—W. H. Wiggins, Adrian.
Vice Pres.—Perry Knapp.
Sec.—A. H. Crane, Pittsford.
Treas.—L. N. Chase, Rollin.

The following directors were also elected:

Jefferson.—Chas. Klingersmith.
Adams.—Wm. Wright.
Moscow.—J. J. Ramsdell
Hudson.—Stephen Comstock.
Wheatland.—S. H. Oaks.
Somerset.—H. F. Smith.
Medina.—H. J. Wirts.
Rollin.—S. C. Lombard.
Woodstock.—N. Osborn.
Cambridge.—C. A. Blackmar.
Rome.—H. H. Ferguson.
Dover.—Brackley Shaw
Seneca.—Arthur Manchester.
Adrian.—J. E. Baker.
Wright.—Thomas Acker.
Ransom.—John Burton.
Pittsford.—J. B. Patterson.

The meeting then closed with music by the band.

At five o'clock the farmers began to gather their families together and start for home, and the excursion train on the M. & O. took away hundreds of visitors. The other hotels about the lake were all crowded with guests during the day. Dancing, music and mirth were kept up until a late hour in the evening. It was conceeded on all hands to have been the "biggest day" in the annals of Devil's Lake.

THE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

The Number of Graduates and What Occupation They are Engaged in.

To the often repeated remark that Agricultural College graduates are scarcely found on farms, the last triennial catalogue is a square denial.

The Agricultural College does educate farmers, as shown in the following statistics. The first class of seven graduated in 1861, and the institution now has, when a little past her majority, 581 graduates, 432 of whom are living, 376 of the 432 being residents of Michigan. Of the 432 graduates there are 113 farmers, 10 professors or instructors in Agricultural Colleges, two horticulturists, three fruit culturists, four apiarists, nine engineers, four machinists and mechanics.

The above, with the addition of a housemother, an artist, a librarian, an agricultural editor, a veterinary surgeon and some signal service employes, make the number of graduates engaged in occupations relating to the industrial arts number 161. Of the remaining 151 some are merchants, some teachers, lawyers, doctors, ministers, editors, agents, clerks and bankers; there is but one whose occupation is unknown. Many of these last engage for a time in some occupation which will help them to the money necessary to begin farming; a young man with neither farm, teams, tools nor money is in no position to begin farming, but his empty hands and pocket are no detriment if he wishes to enter the schoolroom, the counting room, or any other occupation where no capital is needed, and where, after a time of careful living, he is enabled to save as much money as will give him a start on a farm. If circumstances prevent the graduate from becoming a land owner, his training has put him in sympathy with those who not only own land but work it, and he adds his mite by serving on committees at fairs or accepting positions of trust, where his influence will be felt by the farm community; as for example, one of our graduates, a lawyer, is president of the board of the Illinois Industrial University; another, a lawyer, has just published a book on farm law, and so, wherever we find them, we are sure of their interest in agricultural pursuits.

The graduates, not residents of Michigan, are to be found in the following States and countries: Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, District of Columbia, Kansas, Colorado, Ohio, New York, California, Missouri, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Louisiana, Oregon, Texas, Washington, Florida, Utah, Kentucky, Japan and Germany. The present year will send one more young man to the South and one to Massachusetts, each to engage in pursuits closely connected with the farm.—Michigan Farmer.

NOTICE.—The Annual School Meeting of District No. 7, of the township of Tecumseh, for the election of School District Officers, and for the transaction of such other business as may legally come before it, will be held at the General School Building, on Monday, the 7th day of Sept. 1885, at 7 o'clock P. L. G. NORTH, Director.
Dated this 25th day of August, 1885.

Mrs. F. C. Stoepel, of Detroit, is spending a few days at her father's, N. M. Sutton.

Prof. Wilbur, of Adrian, is expected to preach at the Presbyterian church next Sunday.

Irve Osborne caught a snake of the massanger species on his farm in Britton, yesterday in the cool of the morning, before it had warmed up, which measured about four feet in length and four inches around the big part of his body. He left it with G. P. Sparks to add to his collection.

The fall term of the Tecumseh public schools will begin on Monday, Sept. 7th. Examinations for admission will be held at the Superintendent's office on Saturday, Sept 5th, beginning at 9 o'clock A. M. All candidates for admission should if possible present themselves on that day. All former pupils, members of the High School, are also expected to present themselves on that day for classification. This will greatly facilitate the arrangements for school work. Non-resident pupils who are not fully prepared for High School work will find excellent advantages in the grammar school. The prospects are favorable for a larger attendance than usual on the opening of the term.

The HERALD of last week contained an admonition to Capt. Kirk of the Salvation Army to persevere in his attempt to convert Editor Smith, of the Adrian Record. The latter clipped our item and adds:

A common slander is not worth serious notice; but this is more than an ordinary affair. The HERALD editor will please name the weapons he is most familiar with, and state the time and place that would be most agreeable.

This is the first time in ten years of newspaper business experience, that we ever received a challenge for a disinterested effort to promote the religious welfare of a brother journalist. Still we never shrink from a professional duty, however unpleasant it may be. Shall the weapons be horse pistols, Smith & Wesson revolvers, beer bottles, or bologna saugages? Ah, no! Bro. Smith would have a decided advantage with any of these. After much reflection we will name jack-knives as the weapons, and the 9th of July next upon a sail boat in Little Traverse Bay as the time and place. We magnanimously accord to our esteemed contemporary the privilege of selecting the umpire and both seconds.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

The elegant residence of Henry Smith, Esq., was the scene of a brilliant social event yesterday afternoon, at which time his daughter Emma C., was united in marriage to Mr. Fred. G. Kloffenstein of Fremont, Ohio. The ceremony was performed during the noon hour by Rev. Carl Franke, of Monroe, after the forms of the Lutheran church. About fifty relatives and friends assembled to pay their respects, several persons being present from Monroe, Toledo, Youngstown, Ohio, Clinton, N. Y., and other places. After the ceremony, a bountiful collation was served and for two hours the guests passed the time most pleasantly in social enjoyment. A brilliant array of bridal gifts gladdened the hearts of the newly married pair. The bride has lived in this community many years and her departure will be a source of regret to a large circle of warm friends. The groom is now managing a lucrative business at Fremont, Ohio, where his future home will be. Congratulations and good wishes will be theirs, in which the HERALD most heartily joins. May the sunshine of happiness continue to illumine their pathway for many years to come.

Geo. Hollister has a lusty cabbage patch on his place south of the brickyard. He brought a big load to H. E. Anderson's last Monday morning, which contained one head weighing 13 pounds. George drove the team himself, but we refer to the cabbage head. If any man in these parts can beat that cabbage head, let him speak out now, or forever after hold his peace.

Tecumseh has two bands, and when of an evening, they assume positions on the street and try to out blow each other, the whole town turns out to hear the fun. When the boys have wrought their friends up to a sufficiently delightful state of antipathy—and every body is a friend to one band or the other—they steal silently away to crack a bottle of lemonade together, and smile over the fun.—Adrian Times.

Walter A. Perry, composer of the well-known songs, "Where have the Old Folks Gone?" and "By-Gone Days Recalled," has just brought out a song and chorus appropriate to the nation's hour of mourning, entitled, "Gone, Brave One," which will doubtless be as popular and effective as his former productions. Both the words and music were written by him. Published by Perry & Noble, New Bedford, Mass. Price 40 cents.

We have recieved an attractive Illustrated Circular of Adrian College, giving a description of the various Departments of this Institution. The pamphlet is embellished by handsome cuts of the College buildings, the Museum, Interiors, etc., and contains in a compact form just the information desired by those contemplating attending College. Any one may obtain copies of this circular, or of the annual College Catalogue by addressing President D. S. Stephens, Adrian, Mich.

One of the most remarkable accidents occasioned by a stroke of lightning, that has ever come to our knowledge, occurred on the farm of Erv. Whelan, in Franklin, last Friday forenoon. Mr. Whelan and a hired man were ploughing, each with one team, when a shower arose that drove them under cover. They both started for the barn, the two teams being perhaps three or four rods apart. When about twenty rods from the barn, a bolt of lightning struck the team which Mr. Whelan was driving, killing both horses instantly. The team was a magnificent span of bays valued at $400. Neither men, nor the other team, were injured, and the men scarcely felt the shock at all.

Silas Chapman returned from the west last Friday evening. He has been at work in a lead mine and was taken sick from lead poisoning. A few days at home will undoubtedly restore him to health.

John McKinney, formerly of Tecumseh, who now resides at Indianapolis was in town yesterday enroute for the G. A. R. encampment. He will be in Tecumseh again on Saturday and then return home. We never saw Mr. McKinney in better health. He seems to be renewing his age.

John R. Clarke will deliver his lecture "Hits and Misses" at Little Hope, on Wednesday evening, Sept. 2d; at Grange Hall, Macon, on Saturday evening, Sept. 5th; at East Tecumseh on Monday evening Sept. 7th. This lecture has never been given in this vicinity and is said to be one of Mr. Clarke's best.

The Tecumseh Cornet band attended the tournament at Monroe last Thursday. The band makes a fine appearance in their new uniforms. It was a gala day for Monroe. Over 5000 people were in attendance and the exercises were of an interesting character. The Tecumseh boys were well pleased with their reception.

It wouldn't be right to allow the occasion to pass without perpetrating that original but reliable joke, "The meloncholic days have come," etc. Any one may copy without credit. We're no hog in this matter.—Evening Record.

All right, we'll copy without credit, and finish the stanza:

The melon-cholic days have come,
The gladdest of the year,
When all the Sunday Schools and sich,
Partake of picnic cheer.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

Adrian boasts of over 40 newsboys some of whom gather in quite a nice income.

The Blissfield Advance has struck a bonanza in the printing of the village ordinances.

Daniel Root, of Hudson, receives the bounty of $200 from the state for the best sample of sorghum sugar.

A large dining hall will soon be erected on the Morenci fair grounds, so people can get a good square meal without going down town.

The Baptist Sunday School of Weston has a membership of 160. When they give a concert their room is too small to accommodate the spectators.

Two balloon ascensions will take place during the Brooklyn fair on Sept. 10th and 11th. Prof. Hogan, of Jackson is the man who will navigate the air.

The Adrian Record of last Thursday has this item:

"Attending the Devils picnic at Farmers' Lake" was the reply of a business man in answer to the whereabouts of his wife.

Bro. Samson of the Blissfield Advance is getting his "dander up." He will stop all unpaid subscriptions the first of September, and give some Justice a job in collecting arrearages.

John Monaghan, a poor Medina Irishman, was unable to finish cutting his wheat till Tuesday of last week. All he had was one hundred and thirty acres. He expects to get through the winter without the aid of the supervisor, however.—Adrian Record.

John H. Underwood, the postmaster of Addison, has got his Cole for winter. John concluded that in order to keep warm and keep the post office, he must have assistance, and Mrs. Chloe Cole, of Rollin, has become Mrs. John Underwood, and they have warm congratulations from many friends.—Adrian Press.

The Hillsdale Business says that our Baptist church will make a good "snoozing" place, when completed. Not much. If Bro. Farmer finds anyone sleeping while he is sermonizing he will do as the English pastor did—toss a Bible over in that vicinity, and make the sonmambulist feel the Word if he won't hear it.—Hudson Gazette.

Medina is getting ready for the next census taker at a lively rate. The Observer says: Read the following record and then dare say that Medina is a slow coach of a town: A girl baby at Rev. A. H. Jessup's Wednesday night; a 9-lb. boy at Jas. Gaskill's last Tuesday and a little feminine of like proportions at Chas. Brodie's on Wednesday. Also a nice girl born to Mr. and Mrs. Bert Lawrence, a well-known young couple living near Medina, Thursday morning.

On complaint of Nathan Ganun, Prof. E. G. Walker and James Kennedy were arrested Wednesday by constable Harrington for assault and battery. Mr. Walker had some logs at Ganun's that Ganun could not saw. Mr. Walker wanted the lumber, and with Kennedy proceeded to Ganun's mill to haul away the logs to another saw mill. Ganun objected, and it is claimed by him that Walker and Kennedy laid violent hands on him. The case will be enquired into by Justice McCann next Tuesday.—Blissfield Advance.

Addison people are going to raise $200 to use in building a sidewalk through the principal streets of the village, whereby they will have a bond of village sympathy to bind them closer and closer in the ties of hamlet friendship. They ought to make a "bee" when they build the walk, set apart some day for it, let some pretty girls drive the first and last nails, divide the work into sections, offer a prize for the best and quickest work, have ladies furnish doughnuts and hot coffee, and wind up with a tearing old bowery dance in the evening to which every boy engaged in work during the day should have a free ticket.—Adrian Press.

Some vicious person yesterday took advantage of the absence of T. M. Hunter, who was at the farmer's picnic, to force an entrance to his law office by a rear window. The chairs were placed out on the roof of the lean-to at the rear, and the office furniture piled about promiscuously. There was one chair left in the room, and on this was mounted a coat, vest, hat, and pantaloons belonging to Mr. Hunter stuffed and set up to represent the "dear departed secretary of the court-house building committee." An Oscar Wilde sunflower, sixteen inches across, ornamented the manly breast. The office sprinkling pot gaily occupied a proud position between Mr. Hunter's old shoes, one of which, true to life, was only half buttoned. On opening his office door this morning Mr. Hunter refused to enter, and seated himself in Salsbury & O'Mealey's office, where through the open door he gazed deploringly at his other self, declaring that his business was ruined. When our reporter left him he was still sitting there staring in a loony way at his double, with a wild light in his eye, and ever and anon muttering to himself, "My business is ruined," and paying no heed whatever to anything going on around him.—Adrian Record.

THE CITY OF MEXICO.

Mr. O. P. Bills Joins the Army of Pleasure Seekers and Visits the Halls of the Montezumas.

Mr. O. P. Bills returned from his Mexican excursion last Friday. He got back just in time to strike a hay fever atmosphere, but his trip afforded him much recreation as well as benefit, and he considers that the time and money were well spent, in taking a flying trip through the Mexican Republic.

Mr. Bills dropped into the HERALD sanctum last Monday and we took occasion to ply him with a few questions regarding his journey. Believing that his answers will be as interesting to our readers as they were to us, we take the liberty of putting them in type.

I was gone from home exactly one month. I shook the dust of Tecumseh from my feet on Monday, July 20th, and returned on the morning train from Jackson on Friday Aug. 21st. And during that thirty days I was more than busy, you can depend. I went from here to Britton and at that point took the Wabash road to Chicago. From there I went over the Rock Island route to Kansas City. After a brief stop in this rough go ahead Western City, I boarded a train on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road, which is now one of the principal connecting links between the Missouri river and the Pacific coast. I pass through southern Kansas, southeastern Colorado and into New Mexico. Of course, most of the country traversed is new and undeveloped, but much of it is rich in mineral and agricultural resources. That section has a glorious "possibility" before it, when Yankee grit and capital shall have fully developed it. I pass through Las Vegas where the celebrated hot springs are located and where I make a brief halt.

At Albuquerque I leave the main line and take the southern branch to El Paso, Texas, where I cross the Rio Grand into Mexico.

For the first three hundred miles after crossing the line the railroad traverses a very barren country. Mexican officials examined our baggage at El Paso, and from there to Lerdo we were attended by a guard who was on a constant watch for contraband articles. The general face of the country south of El Paso is exceedingly rough and barren, broad valleys and high mountains. The prevailing color of the landscape is the color of the soil, scarcely relieved at all by any green vegetation.

My first halt of any moment was at Durango, a city of about 30,000 inhabitants. Passing through the streets reminded one of traveling in the bottom of a canal. The houses are all constructed of adobe or sun burned brick. They have no outside ornamentation whatever and rarely any inside. They are constructed in a square form with an open interior court for the admission of light. The windows are placed in the walls which open into this interior court.

At Durango I visited Gov. Pallacio, an ex-governor of the state of Durango, and formerly commissioner on Mexican claims to this country. The Governor has an elegant home and a large library of American and English books. His son has lately erected a grist mill, and all the material for its construction came from the United States. I saw a thrashing machine at his place, made at Battle Creek. I was informed that the cylinder was lost in transit and two years elapsed before it finally arrived. Pallacio has a small ranch of only 200,000 acres.

Their methods of farming and farm utensils are very crude. All agricultural lands are irrigated. The plowing is done with a heavy wooden plow hauled by an ox team, the yoke being lashed to the horns of the oxen. Their plowing simply irritates the land. Their two agricultural agencies are irritation and irrigation. The people generally wear sandals, and dress and build their houses as the Moors did 2000 years ago. I saw heavy farm carts made without a particle of iron about them.

As we proceed south and approach the city of Mexico the country is more fertile and more thickly settled. The railroad as it approaches the city, runs upon one side of a huge ditch which was dug to drain the city. This ditch is about ten miles long, 400 feet wide at the top and with an average depth of 300 feet. One hundred years were spent in its construction. The ditch still remains there and the city is still undrained. The climate in this latitude is delightful. It is perpetual summer. Crops are planted and harvested during every month in the year. And the leaves come and go without any apparent change. The snow capped summit of Popocatapetl is visible from the city, and I had a splendid view of the same from the heights of Chepultepec. A beautiful monument has been erected here to commemorate the Mexican soldiers who fell in the war with the United States.

The community there is divided into two classes, the very rich and the very poor. There is no great middle class of small farmers, mechanics and tradesmen, as exists in this country. The rich live in elegant houses, are well dressed, and are provided with fine American horses and carriages. The lower classes live in poor houses and are not overburdened with an excess of clothing.

In Mexico, a policeman stands on every corner armed with a club and a Smith & Wesson revolver, with full license to use either in case of need. The city is under thorough police control. The hotels are not elegant, but are comfortable. The cost of living is about the same as in the United States. The country is at least two hundred years behind the United States, but the railroads are already working a great change. American capital and energy are finding lodgment in all the larger towns. New business enterprises are increasing in number and are generally profitable.

LAST SATURDAY'S RACES.

The blanket matinee, held last Saturday on the new fair ground in Adrian, was well attended, and the spectators witnessed some fine racing. Tecumseh was represented in three out of the five races and carried off her share of the prizes.

In the pacing race, O. W. DeLong entered his mare Maud D. There were three heats, Maud D coming in second upon the three.

In the four year old race, Bingo, owned by Dell Cairns, had a walkaway, taking the two first heats and the race without trouble.

In the running race, W. T. Eccles entered his pony, Teaboy. The race was half mile dashes, best two in three. Teaboy won the two first heats and the race.

Oscar Doolittle, Elliot Gray and Dr. Andrews acted as judges.

The receipts for the day were $200, which sum will be used to further improve the grounds.

County Pioneer Meeting.

The Pioneer Society of Lenawee county will hold its next annual meeting on the beautiful fair grounds in Morenci, on Thursday, Sept. 3rd. The program for that occasion will include a general historical address by the President, F. A. Dewey, of Cambridge; a sketch of Seneca township; short speeches of reminiscence by old settlers; glee club and band music; and of course, a grand picnic feast, in the fair ground grove. Pioneers of old Lenawee: Enjoy a day of rest and by your presence make this meeting of the society a notable success.

Toledo's Big Fair.

The Tri-State Fair occurs at Toledo, September 7 to 12, inclusive, and there will be excursion rates over all railroads for those wishing to see the big show. Premiums and purses amounting to $20,000 will be given, and entries already in promise the biggest exhibit ever on the grounds. Magnificent special features daily. $5,000 in purses for races.

One of the neatest pamphlet programs that has come under our notice in many a day was the Farmers' Picnic program, printed at the office of the Hudson Gazette.

—ATTENTION SOLDIERS—On Wednesday, Sept. 2nd, Mr. Louis K. Gillson, Pension Attorney of Detroit and Washington, will be at the County Clerk's office, Adrian, to consult with soldier's and soldier's heirs in reference to their claims. It is said a large percentage of the pensioners in this locality are entitled to increase, especially among those who have drawn for only only a short period; and that there are a considerable number of officers who are entitled to pay under the act of June 3, 1884, and men who can under the act of July 5, 1884, secure the removal of charges of desertion standing against them. This visit of Mr. Gillson's affords soldier's an opportunity to secure the advice of a reputable Attorney of large experience.

Clement Carpenter and wife will return from Chili to their home in Toledo, early in September. Mr. Carpenter has been secretary of legation at Chili. He is a son of the Hon. Joel Carpenter, of Blissfield.

ALL VERY TRUE.

Bert Burdette's Advice to a Struggling and Dissatisfied Young.

Yes my son, I know those expensive tailors and engravers and furniture and carpet men have got a great deal of money out of your father, and I know that the newspapers in the town have got many hundreds of dollars worth of free advertising out of him, and that the church and the hospitals and the poor have had a good deal given them by him, and that the hundreds of men who are now in your employ owe their bread and butter to your father, and that he has given them steady work and good wages for years, and that he has given a great deal of money to charity, and that he is a public benefactor, and that he is a good man, and a Christian, and a man who is a credit to his country and his family, and that he is a man who is a credit to his country and his family, and that he is a man who is a credit to his country and his family. I know that the newspapers in the town have spoken many hundreds of times of your father's kind and generous nature, and of his public spirit, and of his benevolence, and of his charity, and of his kindness to the poor

DOGS,

Training Them For the Field and Bush—A Calling Demanding Patience.

The training of dogs for the field and bush affords abundant proof that patience is a virtue. So much depends upon the amount of patience and perseverance exercised by the trainer that often dogs are irretrievably ruined simply because of a lack of this quality on the part of those who profess to break them. Of the effects of imperfect breaking the following story was told recently by a gentleman whose experience in that line is somewhat extended:

"Breaking an old dog after he has become confirmed in his own will and settled in his habits, is a very difficult matter. Prince there," pointing to a large, intelligent looking dog, "I bought for a hery song because he had been imperfectly broken when young. After I got him I put him through a regular system of training, but, of course, it was slow and discouraging work. He was naturally wild and headstrong, and would run at such a pace through the bushes as to scare up the birds long before I could get within gun range. To break him of this I tried various devices without success, and finally adopted the swinging bar method. This is done by taking a thick, round stick, and running a wire through holes bored through both ends, up to small staples in the collar. As the dog runs the bar will strike him upon the fore-legs, and in proportion to the swiftness of his gallop will be the heaviness of the blows. This Prince soon discovered, and, of course, he moderated his pace accordingly. But as soon as the bar was removed, he resorted to his old method of running about in headstrong wildness, without the least regard to orders. This was somewhat aggravating to me, as I never yet had a dog that could not be cured of this trick by means of the bar. But not discouraged at my failure, I then tried tying one leg up to his collar, a device recommended by dog-trainers, and also of tying a shot-belt around his neck. Both of these methods, however, failed to work any beneficial results. Prince would work well when thus rigged up in harness, but always resorted to his old tricks again as soon as released.

"Finally, after much patient work and fruitless devising, I hit upon the following plan: I constructed a sort of bridle with a bit made of raw leather. A strong girth was then passed around his body, with a small ring on the under side of it, through which a cord passed connecting the bit with one of his hind legs. As soon as Prince went to gallop fast he would jerk this cord and consequently the bit. When I had rigged it upon him one afternoon and started across the fields, he, as usual started off in wild haste. But the continual jerking of the bit soon began to disconcert him, and after a short run of half a mile he came up to me with the most imploring look in his eyes. But I refused to regard his mute appeal and sent him away again. When I reached home, however, he was completely fagged out and ready to do almost anything. Well, for two weeks I used this bit and bridle whenever I went out with him, and when I finally took it off, Prince was so thoroughly afraid of being submitted to the same process again that he never attempted afterward to range about in his former wild manner. Since then he has been the quietest worker and best trained dog that I have."—N. Y. Tribune.

A HEARTLESS JOKE.

Not So Much of a Joke as the Perpetrator Thought it Was.

Old Zeb Wheeler, who had come to Little Rock as a witness before the United States Court, was "poking" around a railway depot the other day. He exhibited much interest in examining an engine attached to a freight train. The engineer, noticing him, said to the fireman:

"We'll have some fun with that old fellow. Say, my friend, this is a pretty good sized piece of machinery, isn't it?"

"You're shoutin." She puts 'stonishment all over me."

"Don't suppose you could run her, do you?"

"No, I 'spect not. I used to run a saw mill, but this 'rangement lays over anything I ever seed."

"Come up and have a seat."

"Don't kere ef I do."

He climbed into the cab and sat down.

"Laws a massey, ef my folks knowed that I was on one o' these things they'd go all round tellin' the neighbors. Say gentlemen, I didn't sleep none last night an' ef you ain't got no objections I'll step back here an' lay down on the wood."

"All right, go ahead."

The old fellow lay down and the engineer told the conductor what a joke he was going to play. "We'll take him down about fifteen miles, and have the fun of seeing him strike out afoot."

"He might get mad, Jerry?"

"No he won't. He's good natured."

"All right, you're responsible."

The train started. The old man, who had gone to sleep, did not awake. The engineer and fireman laughed. The train had gone some fifteen miles and was approaching a heavy grade, when old Wheeler sprang up, rubbed his eyes and said:

"Say, by grip, hold on here!"

"We can't stop now," the engineer replied. "Have to wait until we get over the grade."

"No, I'll be blamed if I do. I don't want no man to fool this way with me."

The engineer, although he knew the trouble it would impose, stopped the train. Wheeler got off, and shortly afterward when the train had started, he said:

"Don't look like you're going to make the pull. Drive right down thar, an' if you want me to I'll get my steers an' pull you out. This is a mighty bad place. I am much obleeged to you for the ride as it saved payin' or walkin'. So long, gentlemen."—Arkansaw Traveler.

A SITTING HEN.

The Iron-Clad Will a Fowl Displays During the Incubating Period.

Having always lived in the city, my knowledge of the hen had been confined chiefly to the post mortem condition; and like most other city men, I had come to consider her a tough case. But since coming to the country I find that this toughness of the bird is only a faint reminder of the iron-clad will which governed it. I refer now more especially to the first hen I undertook to "break up"—the speckled one with the top comb. She remained on the nest so faithfully that I couldn't help commending her fidelity; but my neighbor—old Dobson—told me she was sitting, and I had better "break her up." He then gave me some suggestions, which I acted upon forthwith.

Dobson told me that imprisonment is too mild for bad cases, and I had better try the cold bath. The apparatus for this experiment is very simple, being merely a hen and a bucket of water. She went in without protest, but as she came out I thought there was a dozen of her. I wiped off my shirt front, wrung out my coat-tails and removed and carefully emptied my shoes. Next day I bought a new hat, but about two months later I found the old one in the cherry tree. It is rather the worse for exposure, but will do to scrub around home in.

As the bath didn't work a cure (and I have since learned that it seldom does) I placed an old dripping pan under a soap box and compelled the hen to stand in about two inches of water. During the day the thermometer crawled up to ninety-five degrees, and when I returned at night hot and cross, the cool and airy appearance of the hen excited my wrath. One kick of the box and she was on the nest again. I limped rather perceptibly for a day or two after, but it was nothing serious.

She was not disturbed again that night but next morning I proceeded to apply the "stick cure." Seated on the wheelbarrow with the hen between my knees, I began to bind two little sticks to her legs in such a manner that being unable to bend them (the legs) she could not proceed with her work. I got one nicely on, and congratulated myself that this little scheme would do the business. Suddenly there was a general convulsion; and when I came to I was puzzled to know which was myself and which the wheelbarrow. I now became desperate, and had recourse to sticks, stones, brickbats and whatever I could lay my hands on. The hen, of course, escaped to a safe distance. I wish I could say as much for the eggs.

When I next entered the barn the incubation was going merrily on at about seventeen knots an hour. The hen appeared as if nothing had happened, and there was a far-away look in her eyes as though she could already see her future brood manipulating the truck garden. I seized an axe and started to renew the fight, but wiser counsels prevailed and I retired.

Finally, the hen wasn't "broke up." I was.—R. Morgan, in Judge.

No Style, But the Boys Froze to Him.

When he took command of the armies in the West he went slipping into Chattanooga as quietly as though he had been under arrest. The morning after his arrival I was one of a band of soldiers engaged in tumbling boxes of crackers into the wagons of a supply train. We did not like the work; we were not taking much pains to place the boxes right in the wagon; we wanted to get them in and go. As I dropped one box in a little reckless quiet, shrinking sort of a man, who had been roaming aimlessly about the platform, said, with incisive firmness: "That won't do, men. Those crackers are going to men who are starving. Every cracker is precious, and the more boxes you get into that wagon the more hungry men you will feed tonight." I looked up with the idea of telling the speaker to go to blazes, when my eyes caught sight of two stars on his shoulder. I then looked closely at the face and the figure, and I knew that I stood in the presence of General Grant. I climbed into the wagon without a word, rearranged all the boxes, while the General stood there making suggestions and pointing out with his cane little changes that could be made in arrangement. The clerk who was superintending the loading of the wagons was a more impressive figure, as he strode in his autocratic way up and down the platform, than was the commander of the armies of the West, but I tell you the boys froze to Grant.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

White Dresses for Mourning.

Serge, Cheviot, and flannel are the favorite fabrics for white dresses worn by those in mourning; they are said to be as cool as muslins, and are certainly cooler than the starched pique dresses formerly worn. These are made in tailor fashion, and are usually all white; there are, however, some fine white wools with boucle or tufted black stripes that are very effective when well made; English tailors have also used black soutache braid on a vest, side panel, collar and cuffs in branching coral patterns and in vermicelli designs for trimming white serge dresses. Sometimes a sash drapery of black gros grain ribbon of great width incased with a belted waist and house-maid skirt of white flannel.

Fine French nainsook is the white muslin for mourning dresses, and their trimmings are gathered or pleated frills, many rows of tucks, and insertions of the woven revering. Pure Irish linen dresses have been introduced in England, and are made in the severest tailor styles, with large buttons of thread or of pearl for their only garniture. The sheer linen cambric called kenting and the thin mulls are used by those who can add a little lace for trimming the neck and sleeves.—Harper's Bazar.

One of the chief uses to which castor oil is now put is that of dressing and softening leather for boots. It was formerly used for dosing children whose stomachs disordered. And an awful dose it was. Now we give children Brown's Iron Bitters, which tones the stomach, regulates digestion, and imparts strength to the whole body. Brown's Iron Bitters is incomparably better than castor oil, and more pleasant to take.

The story is told of an old hunter in Michigan who lost his way in the woods a number of times while the country was new. A length he secured a pocket compass and its use was explained to him by a friend. But shortly afterward he lost his way again and lay out as usual. CHOLERA is rapidly moving westward and will soon appear in this country. In order to prevent disastrous effects from its ravages every preventive should be employed, and the system should be in perfect condition. At this season of the year the system is in a weak state and easily susceptible to dangerous disease. Pain in the back, weariness, lassitude, headache, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints are but the result of neglect. During the last visitation of cholera to this country no medicine was found equal to Mishler's Herb Bitters, both as a preventive and cure, and it has been equally successful in all the diseases above mentioned. It renews and invigorates the blood, restoring to health and strength, and thus shielding the system from disease.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

This is perhaps the most popular department in the church of the present day. It is not the purpose of the writer to write a history of its institution and development, but rather to speak of it as it is and, perhaps, suggest some improvement in its management and methods.

Sporadic attempts are being made all over the country to establish such schools that shall be absolutely independent of any church. Very few school houses have stood a term of ten years without being made the theatre of such an effort, but the mortality among these feeble schools is very discouraging to their projectors, to say the least.

The school starts out with a flourish of trumpets and is thronged the first summer; the chilling blasts of autumn rapidly decimate its members and soon it sinks into a comatose state to be revived again in the spring with somewhat less activity than was manifested the previous season. This continues two or three years and finally the enterprise is abandoned with a feeling of discouragement and disgust by the philanthropists who have tried to do something for their community.

The Sunday school is a part of the church and must be so enough and should support itself in order to succeed. The only mission of the church is to save sinners and all its departments should work for this end. The officers and teachers of the properly organized Sunday School are accountable to the church for the manner in which they do their work. They should be appointed by the church with special consideration of their ability to perform the work assigned them, and while tastes should not be wilfully disregarded, no one should be appointed to any position for which he is unfit morally or mentally, because of his popularity.

The specific work of the Sunday school is to instruct its pupils in the truths of scripture and the doctrines of the church. The church should furnish the best attainable helps in the reach of teacher and pupil, in order that this work may be accomplished.

Of all mistakes in Sunday school work, perhaps the most general is the plan of making the Sunday school self supporting. The support of the Sunday school devolves as freely and as naturally upon the church as does the support of the day school upon the parents.

Only let this idea be established that the school is really a part of the church, and that the church should support all its parts, becomes a self evident proposition.

Our Tecumseh Sunday schools are doing a work for the future, the value of which no man can measure. They deserve the support of all who desire the prosperity of our village. Although not perfect, we think we can say they will compare favorably with the schools of the adjacent villages, and their motto is "onward."

A WORKER.

Don't Talk Hard Times.

There is a good deal in talk. Let a man talk dull times, and it is infectious; every body in the store gets the blues, and in turn talk dull times, and from hustling around to stir up and take care of what business there is, they all get to sitting down and moping over the dull times. If a customer does happen to drop into one of these "dull times" stores, he actually gets frightened out of buying one-half as much as he actually expected to, because everybody looks so blue. He catches the spirit of the store, and resolves to hang on to all his money with a death grip. The bugbear of dull times ought to be set down on. It is doing more to kill business than any thing else. Tell a well man he is sick, keep it up, and you will eventually hound him to death. Business is not all that we could desire, still we know a good many firms who shut down on crying "dull times" long ago, and are making money, to-day.—Ex.

TO THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF LENAWEE.

I am informed that the authorities of the Lenawee county agricultural society have appointed me superintendent of the boys' and girls' department of the fair which will occur in September. The appointment was probably occasioned by my remarking to one of the officers that that department had never had "half a chance," and I wished some one would take hold of the matter and stir up such an interest as would bring out the talent of our boys and girls and encourage such a display as could not be "hid in a corner." Now what is to be done? Less than a month remains for plans and work. How many boys and girls will help this enterprise? Among the hundreds of children under sixteen years of age, how many will resolve to contribute at least one article to that department. Who are the young carpenters, machinists, inventors, artists, florists, farmers, poultry raisers, curiosity seekers, seamstresses, in short, who has skill in any direction that can be employed in this undertaking? Look over the list of premiums, and remember you can attempt all of that, and everything you please outside of it.

Remember your father's ticket admits your display without extra charge. Now, don't sleep, boys and girls, until you have discussed the matter, and decided to "lend a hand." Then, be honest. Set a good example for your elders by exhibiting no article that is not truly and wholly your own work. Let us have a grand rally and you can produce an exhibition that will command room and attention, and one of which Lenawee county will be justly proud.

TREATMENT OF SOD IN THE FALL.

In the ordinary rotation of the farm, sod land is usually plowed for corn. Opinions differ in regard to the advantage, or otherwise, of the fall plowing of sod. The truth of the matter is, that like all other farm work, this depends very much upon circumstances. One of these is, the manner in which the plowing is done. If the dry, bare sod is plowed under roughly and so left until spring, when it is cross-plowed, and the sod cut up into pieces, and turned this way and that, and for the greater part reversed, the work had certainly been better left undone. This way of treating sod, too common, we are sorry to say, is a most mischievous one, and leaves the land in a wretched plight for corn planting. The better way is, to spread what manure is ready for the land, and leave it until November, and then turn the whole under with an even and regular lap furrow. If this is well done, it leaves the soil in the very best condition for spring work. The furrow slices lie with the manure between them, while the manure is not buried under the sod, but both standing, in part, on edge, allow the air to penetrate through the crevices, and cause thorough decomposition. The crests of the ridges break down by the action of frosts, and the land is gradually consolidated by settlement, through the winter. When the harrow is passed over the land in the spring, the fine manure, and the soil, and the decayed sod, are thoroughly mixed on the surface, leaving a mass of plant food below, as deep as the land had been plowed. The roots of the young corn plants find food wherever they penetrate the soil, and an abundance of it within reach to carry them to the end of the growing season. In the culture of every crop, very much depends upon the preparation of the soil, but this is most especially true as regards corn, which occupies the ground for only about three months. How necessary then it is, to provide a store of food for this crop, of the right kind, in the right place, and in sufficient quantity to supply its urgent necessities. One of the most effective ways of making this requisition, is to make the most of the sod by treating it at its season in the manner here described.—American Agriculturist for September.

Rather Mixed Relationship.

Wm. Kidder of Irving township married a Miss Keach a few years since. Recently his father and brother each married a sister of his wife. This rather mixes up the relationship of these families. The original Kidder is brother in-law to his own sons and father-in-law and brother-in-law to his sons wives. His wife is step-mother and sister-in-law to his sons and mother-in-law to her sisters. They are grandfather and grandmother and uncle and aunt to the children of the two Kidder boys and their wives. Should Kidder pere and wife have children and children would be nephews and nieces or both to their half brothers and sisters and uncles and aunts to their own cousins. But we forbear. Any person who will so mix up this world's relationship ought to be banished to Alaska and become Governor Swineford's most confidential adviser.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

A coldness has sprung up among us and summer greens are taken with fire. A winter scene worth photograping crests the hills of Allen's farm, where thousands of dead peach trees sprangle sunshine, and the winds play a cheerless refrain to labor lost on crackling twigs. The blighted fruit hopes are to be cleared away and the ground reset with living ones. They have two thousand young trees, for the coming winter to spoil perhaps, but being only sure they cannot reap without planting, they will try again. Wheat is rushed into market lest prices lower, and though most crops are good, those who own them are ruined past belief. If some one would invent a cure for mourning twaddle, here's who would subscribe a mite for their monument, though I don't feel like buying a million dollar headstone for Grant. He has commemorated himself and its a waste of money to letter marble with a story already engraved on Eternity. Who but quarrymen importers, contractors and stonecutters will be benefited by such cold type, national gratitude. Promise the fund shall endow a home for helpless humanity, or some institution which like his life-work, will be an everlasting benefit to the world, and from hands and hearts gold and God-speed will rain.

GOLD IN MICHIGAN.

Some weeks ago, when Jones, Miner and others discovered the vein of gold bearing sugar quartz on the property of the Lake Superior iron company, near Ishpeming, they were in a quandry, for the company has an imperative rule never to lease its property for the benefit of those exploring for iron or any other minerals. The next best thing to be done was to secure options on all adjoining lands. This was done, Edward Breitung and Peter Gingrass, the adjacent owners, giving them the necessary rights. When these precautions had been taken they, one week ago, made known their discovery, and created the intense gold fever, which is now raging throughout the Michigan mining territory, and, in fact, in all parts of the country. But now another claimant has reached the scene. Joseph C. Foley, a former stockbroker of Ishpeming, announces prior options on the property of Messrs. Breitung and Gingrass, and he proposes to hold them, so that a lawsuit of an extensive nature will probably be necessary to settle the claims of the contestants. In the meantime the stockholders of the Lake Superior iron company are preparing to push the development of the gold vein on its lands, and, after a proper assay, if the rock proves anything like what the first samples have promised, a quartz mill will be immediately erected. Two assays of the rock have already been completed. One assay was from the best specimens. Average pieces taken from among those best specimens gave $8.95 in gold and silver, nearly all being gold. These choice specimens varied in weight from six ounces to as many pounds, and this was their average value. The second assay was made from the leanest piece of quartz which could be found in the rock taken from the vein. In it there was no free gold visible to the naked eye, or distinguishable with the ordinary prospector's pocket glass. This gave $62.24 to the ton, nearly all in gold also. There is a wide range between these two extremes, but the assays prove conclusively that if the vein is as rich approximately through the whole extent that the quartz will go at the rate of several hundred dollars a ton. The discoverers say there is a vein of the rock four feet wide, and already traced a distance of over 700 feet. An immense amount of prospecting is being done in the vicinity of the discovery, and the excitement is very intense. There will be no want of capital to push the work, if the rock realizes all it promises.

The new addition to the Council Building is rapidly approaching completion.

The German evangelical church, lately built at Manchester is in the throes of a theological controversy as to whether the doctrines of Luther or Calvin shall be preached. The Calvin faction being in the majority the other side refuse to pay notes which they gave towards paying for the church and suits have been brought in the justice court against them. Meanwhile the outsiders wonder why they can't both go back to the doctrines of Christ and find harmony.

The following from the Lansing Republican is the kind of tales Lansing young ladies regale their friends with when returning home from abroad: "A young lady who has just returned from a visit with Detroit friends had her purse grabbed by a sneak thief while in that city but pluckily persued him through an alley and around vacant lots until he threw back the purse and contents and was glad to get away with no greater loss than that of a new silk hat. Pity there are not more Lansing young ladies stopping in Detroit. Some of them might discount the combined police and detective 'talent' of the town and capture the gentlemanly burglar."

WHY HE SOLD THE FARM.

[illegible]

THE HAUNTED ENGINE.

An Engineer's Terrible Revenge Upon a False Friend.

By such parties as were in the habit of frequenting the Transfer & Berger Railway Company's offices, Julius Wright must be well remembered. This observation is supposed to apply more particularly to the loiters and delvers, who were not likely to meet the man under other conditions. Socially considered he was very much more of a swell than appeared at all justifiable by his position or his personal qualifications—always excepting that indefinable, mysterious quality known as "magnetism," which is, as novelists and telepathists inform us, quite independent of either beauty or merit. He was an insignificant little fellow, not over five feet four in his biggest-feeling moments. His face was alert and keen, but, to my eye, always fraught with the peculiar expression of a man liable at some time to go wrong. One does not follow any business for the years that I have done without learning to recognize the signs of potential guilt—that is to say, in faces of the active type. I never try to analyze a pretty face; I can't do it. I think no man living can.

Wright was a man of accomplishments. He could dance and sing, and play prettily upon several instruments, and turn off neat little verses—vers de société—isn't that the term? And he was a manly little chap; could swim and shoot, ride, drive spar and run with the best. So, as men liked him for his good-fellowship, and women for his love-making art, Liberality, Wright was a popular man.

But I knew a thing or two about him. I was not surprised—not much—when, after a few days of uncertainty and suppressed rumors, it came out that Julius Wright had absconded with a sum of the railway company's funds reaching well up toward the hundreds of thousands—more than it appeared should have been accessible to him. The general inference and the natural, was that he had betaken himself out of the country to the refuge of a government not on terms of extradition with the United States. Great, then, was the astonishment of the community when it transpired later that the escaped defaulter had been living for many weeks in easy reach of his pursuers, and actually in the employ of the company he had robbed. It was no wonder, said his late companions, with retroactive admiration, somewhat misplaced, that the officers of the law had failed to find in the stoker of a freight train over the southwestern division, the spruce and fastidious individual who had been almost a social autocrat in the headquarters city of his company.

The newspapers got the story, of course, and gave it the usual send-off, with extra-heavy head-lines, and all the alliteration the dictionary would supply. I remember one of their phrases about "Engine No. 23 pulling into Walling with importance in every clank of the metal," and "the plucky and power displayed by the engineer, who had to report a notable occurrence on his run." Briefly stated, it appeared that No. 23 had come into Walling minus her fireman. The engineer's story was that some twenty miles back, as they crawled up a hard grade, the fireman had jumped from the train, discovering his identity to the engineer, together with a satirical message to the directors of the road.

"Tell 'em,' says he to me—'from Julius Wright—that's me—their office was better than a school of polytechnics. Say, Stacy, can't I fire?' And with that he jumped, just as we started to run down the grade. I brought her in alone. I knew I could do it, and we was too short of hands to call one of the boys from the twists—the brakes; so I just come on and fired for myself. Tired? I should smile! and so shaky and starty I couldn't sleep—couldn't even set down and eat. You bet! The boys'll tell how all broke up I was. But I daresn't stop short off. No, sir! I just rustled round and cleaned the engine, and put her to bed myself. Well, I've heard men say they could run an engine sixty mile and fire for themselves, but I'm blamed if I could! Twenty's enough for me," he said, with what struck me as rather defiant emphasis and a keen, undertrowed look—for I got the story from his own lips, when I was sent out to Walling to work on the case.

I am not, as a rule, an imaginative man. "A patient, persistent plodder"—that is the characterization I once heard as made of me by our chief, who is given to alliteration in his rhetorical flourishes. Thus lacking imagination, it seemed to me little was to be gained by following Wright to Walling, whence he had gone with no form of leaving leave. But to Walling the chief chose to dispatch me, after two of our best men had come back from a fruitless stay there.

"Certain uncommon agencies of receptiveness are abnormally alive to impressions in you," he said; "I'd like you to go to Walling."

And to Walling I went, after some preliminary training under the fireman of a local train on one of the company's branch lines.

But the night before I started I got a note that very [illegible] intimated that my services were required by Miss Muriel Duane, and requested me to wait upon her at the earliest opportunity. Miss Duane had not yet returned from a trip abroad. I could not conceive what she wanted of me. Moreover, in view of my unfavorable departure, it appeared to me much in the nature of a [illegible]. And yet—and yet—the father was president of the T. & D. Railway Company; Julius Wright had been a protégé of the house, and I might, I think, in [illegible] data.

Miss Duane was a handsome girl of the dark, heroic type. I had seen her coming off the steamer, and I was genuinely shocked at the change in her in a fortnight. She was haggard and thin, as if she had been ill for months. She wasted no time in making her wishes known. She wished to employ me to track up Julius Wright. Most women would have assumed some trumped-up reason, more or less unplausible, to account for her interest in this man, who was virtually hardly more than her father's clerk. Miss Duane very properly asserted that her motive was no affair of mine. Her one concern was to spare no expense in finding Julius Wright.

"I am very sure we will find a clue at Walling," she said. "I can't put that conviction from my mind. And when you find him give him to me from me."

"I was obliged to tell her of my prior undertaking, and to intimate that I feared that the mission was prejudiced by the loose open the note she had given me.

"Read."

X Y Z thousand dollars, the sum with which Wright had absconded, were the day paid in full against the T. & D. Railway Company by the immediate relative, whose arrest was then withdrawn.

"Here are the railway company's receipts," she said, and displayed them, duly attested. "Now, you must see, the proceeding is dismissed. But Mr. Wright. Every added day of his absence makes it harder to reinstate him——

She paused, gasped, shuddered, and put out one hand toward me with a look of fright and pain. As I caught her cold slim fingers in answer to that appeal, she fell back swooning in her chair. Deathly as she looked, I could not bring myself to call for help. It seemed to me it would be an infamous thing to expose her to the curious curiosity and comment of domestics and chance guests. With my free hand I loosed the flowers from a vase close by and lashed the water in her ghastly face.

"O, God!" she moaned, "the fire! the merciless fire!"

Her left hand was clasping some ornament at her throat, dragging down the suspending chain until it threatened to strangle her. I bent to unclasp that clinging hand. It yielded its grasp stiffly, and the pendant locket swung into my own hand. The gold burned my flesh as if it were a coal. And with that contact an unaccountable thrill swept over me—a sensation like that we have when we seem to re-live in a dream some part of a former existence. Out of this vague mistiness of thought and feeling, I seemed to resolve the face of Julius Wright, distorted, full of horror and agony unspeakable. I started. Miss Duane was languidly opening her eyes.

"I fainted again, I suppose. No; pray call no one," she said, weakly, but with decision. "I am so grateful that you brought no one here—but you may give me, if you will, a cup of wine from the cabinet in the corner."

She sipped the restorative slowly, and graciously smiled at my clumsy speeches of sympathy.

"Then you will make additional efforts to give me relief, will you not? For this arises from pure anxiety and grief. I never swooned in my life until a fortnight ago. It seems contemptible to trade upon one's weakness, does it not? But—well—I think men will let yourselves be moved by the sight of physical suffering, where the extreme of mental anguish would make no impression."

"Madam," I said, "what does that locket contain?"

She started with a haughty, questioning gaze, that became lost in wonder.

"It looks—a miniature."

"Perhaps a lock of hair? Yes, I thought as much. Now, let me advise you. Take it from your neck, with care to touch not the chain, put it away in a safe or drawer—where you will—out of reach of contact with you, and I guarantee you immunity from these swoons."

"What do you—what can you mean? What do you know?"

"I know no more than yourself—only that there is a subtle essence of relation between the material and the spiritual that our finite, faulty knowledge has not grasped. You wear the portrait and the hair of a person for whom you have a strong congenial affinity, and on physical contact with it your over-susceptible organization receives the force of his suffering—stay! it may not be bodily suffering—it may be grief, or apprehension—or remorse."

Her proud head drooped.

"I believe you are right," she said; "my folly has been so great that I have fancied I found actual consolation in touching the lock of hair I had arranged to meet my hand. And now I fancy that I can remember how every attack of this nature has been coincident with such a lapse of weakness. At all events, I will experiment on your advice. My very life is sapped by these swoons, from which I bring no definite recollection, but a sense of indescribable horror, and peril to Julius Wright."

All the restlessness and the intensity of Miss Duane's own spirit seemed to possess me when I went to Walling. And all futility and non-fruition of effort seemed to confront and mock me. It was easy enough to set any Walling tongue a-wagging about "the swell that tired for Stacy, and skipped between two days," but to the published facts no one could add a word. Wright had been a clever actor, and had given no clue. His record here was like the outward life of any man in his apparent station. Stacy was willing enough to repeat his story, but it was the same unvarying account he had already given so often. His conclusion of it now began to be conjured, as I have intimated by a touch of resentment. He was evidently not a little vain of his unassisted management of his great machine in that memorable night-run, and jealous at hearing that others had surpassed the feat. Indeed, he had become so arrogant and unreasonable as to have offended most of "the boys at the yard." Walling being a division terminus, the little town was a general stopping place, whence the men were variously assigned to the trains dispatched night and day.

"All Stacy wants now is a Jew-store diamond-pin to make a way-up conduc., but he'll have to sport a double chin before he can get to be a 'director. He'll be a runnin' the whole thunderin' line pretty soon," said a railroad man, one of a group lounging on the boarding-house piazza.

"Well, he can start in right now," said another, "and I'll copper on any train he starts. I'd sooner drive the devil's dump-cart than to fire on '23' again to-night. That engine's got the phthisic, and she's go'n t' bust and blow the whole crew over into Utah."

"Give us a rest," spoke up a boss from the machine shops; "'23' 's the best on the division. They's not a rivet sick about her."

"O, they ain't, ain't they? Well, what I want to know's what makes them sulphur fumes just settle down in the cab so thick you could make a sieve out of 'em with a shot-gun. I swear, I thought I'd choke last week."

"That's so," said a quiet little fellow, who was busily plucking out his mustache, hair by hair. "I fired on '23' week before last, and I could hardly breathe, and worse 'n that, somehow I got scared, and—and—well, I don't know what was the matter, but I went to sleep—or fainted, or something—and when I came to, there I was a heap full o' cold sweat, and Stacy shovelin' coal right over my head."

"There's me!" cried the malcontent.

"Scared!" Why, my heart climb up and clawed at my tongue, and it felt as big and hard as a driving-wheel, and I accelerated, I tell you! straight, but says I've got a passenger aboard. His name's Mr. Speedy, and his profession's warden. He's signed warrant on me that '23' 's got a mighty sick man on her back, and makes it powerful hot for anybody else. A prisoner's a prisoner, and Mr. Train-Dispatcher, I'm ready, sir."

"Suppose he'd put me in your place?" I said.

The men gathered about me with notes of admiration both derisive and sincere. It was an hour, and the hands escorted me to the office and presented me to the train-dispatcher. There was much talk, commonly, conducted with a gravity that would not discredit Parliament, and much humor of a quality original cast. The train-master looked annoyed when he saw my credentials. Hitherto he had deemed me what I appeared—a supernumerary "hand," awaiting assignment.

"Well, I don't like this," he said, having ushered me into his private office. "Couldn't you make your opportunity some other way? It's taking such chances for the train. Oh, you can fire? O, that's all right, then. Just so Stacy has help—I couldn't risk him alone."

"Drink?" I said, casually.

"Not a drop. No, I guess it is the strain of the other night. He's getting all broke up."

At nine o'clock "23" stood coughing for her start, a great ten-wheeler, shining, mighty. The yard lights shone on the dark brown cars of the through freight behind her, stretching back, a long line, like some articulated, sentient creature. A group of the boys stood near, and speeded us with good-natured chaff.

"Look out you don't lose your mate again, Stacy," cried one; "this is another new man, and it's just a mouth to-night since the other said 'Good-bye, sweetheart!'"

When I looked at Stacy after this, his face was as white as the aerated fluid in the tube of the water-gauge. We had scarcely left the lights of Walling behind, when I felt a singular sense of oppression. Our smoke seemed to settle down upon us, laden with sulphurous gas, as when confined in a tunnel. Our train was a "time-freight" that ran but once a week, and at this period the line was clear for our passage over the whole division. Carrying the water supply in a tank-car, we had no need to stop on the whole run. We clattered past small way-stations, fast asleep already, dark, save for the signal-man's lonely light. We clanked through defiles trembingly, as if the dark mountains on either side were crouching monsters, gathering for the spring. We hurled ourselves upon the shadowy shapes of spectral bridges, with the indrawn breath of uncertainty with which man ever approaches the insubstantial and mysterious.

"Fire up," cried the engineer; "the is not burnt!"

Since our first start he had been leaning on his rests, save when he mechanically tended the machine. But now he turned, with a swift whirl, caught the chain door-swing of the fire-box, swung it open with the stoker's accustomed swaying pull, peered into the fiery gap with searching gaze, and slammed the iron door as if upon a foe.

"Fire up! Why don't you put in coal?"

It wanted half the usual time, but I was constrained to obey. I had not yet wiped the blackened sweat from my brow, when he whirled about again and opened the furnace door.

"Plainer and plainer," he cried; "put in more coal."

He turned to the window again as I brought the scoop. That coal never was burned. I threw it over the side, impelled by prudential motives less than by a curious appearance that arrested me when I opened the fire-box door. And so, through the rest of the run, while the smoke gathered thicker, denser and more fetid, again and again, and a score of times again, we repeated that same formula—he commanding, I alternating actual obedience with simulated compliance.

The way-stations were thickening toward Belen, when the engineer approached me, after one of his wistful, reluctant visits to the fire.

"You are a good lot," he said; "you have got sand. The others all fainted dead away—they couldn't stand it. Yes, you're good pluck. Come!" he said, ingratiatingly, "you look and see if he is there."

I opened the iron door. "Yes, he is there."

He caught the loaded scoop and thrust it into my hand. "Throw it on him!" he cried, "and burn him up. Perhaps you can do it."

I shoveled in the coal, then turned and took him by the arm.

"Why did you burn him up?" I said.

He cowered behind me toward the tender, turning his face from the furnace, yet glancing back at it askant, as he had done all along, drawn toward it by reluctant fascination.

"Now I will tell you," he said. "I knew all along that he was Julius Wright. We lived behind his rooms, up yonder in the city—my wife and I—my Josie. Why—yes—he got me this berth! Do you suppose I'd have given him away to the company—not for ninety millions!—when he came out here and told me he was sweet on Miss Duane, and had robbed the company to get a start for her? No, sir! He carried that pile of notes with him day and night—you know how much of it I could have got by giving him up. He fired for me two months, a'e with me, slept in my bed. The boys wondered to see me so thick with Sam Barnes, my fireman. Fire up! Is he——? O, it's no use!" He took up his recital: "He got a letter that night at Belen. There was a picture in it. See."

He took from his breast a letter and a photograph. Blood was on them both. The face in the picture was the face of a woman I had seen often enough in a luxurious little cottage on our northern bay—a merry, blonde face, with perfect teeth peeping through the parted lips—the type of woman who could smile into a man's eyes while she dishonored him.

"I happened to come behind him while he read. I saw the picture, and knew it. I knew the writing. She signed: 'Your loving Josie.' I stole away without his having heard me; and the first mile out of Belen I struck him down, and took my false wife's picture from him, and I burned him! But mark you I killed him first—he was dead when I thrust him into the fire-box. But I've been burning—through him—in the flames of hell! and burning alive! Fire up, and see—is he there? O, yes! I knew it. You see, on this run it is all reversed. He begins to grow into shape back near Walling, where his bones fell into ashes as I stirred them to the coals. The melted lumps of his jewelry are in my trunk at Walling—I could clean my engine that night, and I found them. Well, he grows and grows in the fire, until he stands like life on the spot where I killed him. You'll see soon—yonder ahead, where a pile of rock is over a Mexican grave."

And in truth, when the headlight flashed on an upheaped cairn of stones, topped by a rough brown cross, once more John Stacy cried in my ear "Fire up!" and from the open fire-box door appeared to issue something in human form, pallid and bleeding—the shape of Julius Wright. Farther and farther the dead man pressed the living, to the very edge of the tender's slippery step. Then I succeeded in stopping the train. The cab was empty, and a few rods farther back John Stacy lay beside the rails, stone dead.—Y. H. Addis, in San Francisco Argonaut.

SOME FIGURES.

Calculations Showing That the World Is the Heritage of the Caucasian.

Among the little-noticed but most important facts in the history of the world is the enormous recent increase of the number of white men in it. It is barely two centuries (1683) since those races, though even then the most energetic of mankind, formed but a small fraction in the total of humanity—probably ten per cent. of the whole—and were by no means certain that they could defend themselves against the remainder. The white races in and out of Europe, under the influence of some still mysterious call upon their energies, have multiplied nearly threefold, and are to-day, as Mr. R. Giffen has shown in his recent address to the Statistical Society, 425,000,000. As there is no evidence of any corresponding increase in the dark races, and as, indeed, such increase has been outside India, nearly impossible, the white men are now, by the best calculations, one-third of the entire population of the world, instead of being, as they were only two centuries ago, a little more than ten per cent. They have, moreover, if anything, increased in physical strength and have so developed in brain and consequent power of organization, that it may be doubted if the whole remainder of mankind, even if all were reduced to equal weapons, could seriously injure the white third, which again, if it chose to act together and employ without pity the weapons its intelligence has enabled it to construct, could in a few years reduce the remainder of the world to an uninhabited desert. They have lately taken to conquering Africa, and are entering at a hundred points at once; seizing almost silently, certainly without serious effort, huge slices like French Africa, South Africa, Madagascar, the vast valley of the Niger, and the still more extensive region drained by the system of rivers called the Congo. Nor is there much reason to believe that the process will soon be checked, for the white men are urged forward by an irresistible spur over which they have no control. The increase of the yellow race, which must once have been so incredibly fast, has stopped, and that of the dark races of India, which for a century has been amazing, is being checked by recurrent famines; but that of the white people goes on so fast that the transport of a huge army every year across the Atlantic makes no impression on their numbers, and at their present rate of increase they will in 1984 be a thousand millions, or much more than half of then existing mankind.

The world is the heritage of the white man; that is the first lesson of Mr. Giffen's figures; but there is another, also, which Englishmen will do well to think over patiently, and, if they can, without hatred in their hearts. They have no right to anger with the visible will of God. If Mr. Giffen's figures are correct—and, subject to some arrest of existing law, they must be as correct as if they were merely unapplied calculations—there is but one race on earth with whom it behooves the Teuton, in all his branches, to keep friends. This supremacy of the white man will in the end—and, recollect, children may be born to-day who will see the end, and then be younger than Sir Moses Montefiore—be the joint supremacy of the Teuton and Slav. In 1984, when the world contains 1,000,000,000 of white faces, 500,000,000 of these will be English and Germans, and 300,000,000 will be Slav. There will practically be no other white races, the French not increasing, the Spaniards increasing slowly—if, indeed, as in Mexico, they do not rather suffer absorption in a dark people. If the Teuton and the Slav can keep friends, the world is theirs; and if not, there will be the most terrible struggle recorded in history since the white barbarians fought the white Romans and their darker allies. We are not sure that an agreement is possible until a great fight has taken place, for Slav and Teuton seem unwilling to comprehend each other, though there is not between them the internecine hatred sometimes observed in history; but if their statesmen could arrange terms on which the conflict could be permanently avoided, a huge mass of misery might be saved to our immediate descendants. To avoid the quarrel will be difficult, for the Slav is just now strangled; and to reach the open water, and so take his natural part in the greater movement of mankind, he must pitch himself on somebody, be it on Turkey, on England or on China; but the means of avoidance are worth the study and patience of years.—London Spectator.

ACCIDENTS THAT ARE COSTLY.

The Expense That Railroads Are Put to by Even the Most Ordinary Accidents.

"You occasionally hear people find fault because managers of railroads do not prevent accidents," said a railroad man in Jersey City the other day. "There may be bears among railroad owners who rejoice in wrecking railroads that they do not own, but to the practical railroader a train wreck is a big loss directly, besides the loss in prestige which follows."

"Is the rolling stock so costly?"

"Yes, a freight train for instance, that rolls down an embankment, where half of it is burned will give you a good idea of the loss. The average engine is worth $7,000. A common freight car is worth $175, or perhaps $500. The ordinary gondolas are worth from $400 to $125. An engine is rarely ruined beyond repair, but a wreck can knock $3,000 out of it just as easy as rolling off a log. A burned car is a ruined car, of course, and repairs on those that are crushed may cost any where from $50 to $200 each. If a passenger car, such as is used on ordinary roads, is burned, $3,500 goes up in smoke. These figures are for the cars in use, and not new out of the shop. From this you can see that wrecks may happen which cost a company $10,000, and yet nothing is likely to be said about them in the papers unless some one gets hurts, and not then if the railroad men can keep it quiet."—*N. HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Works through the blood, regulating, toning and invigorating all the functions of the body.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * I have had ringworm tumor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores, so also my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, though I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

THE ART OF GOOD TALKING.

The Virtue in a Good Subject and the Value of Silence.

Those who are not very good talkers, and are mortified sometimes by being the wall flowers of the evening, may get some consolation from the consideration that there is a great deal of talk that could very well be spared, and that idle words must be accounted for. Indeed, they also serve who only listen. A Frenchman once said of a gentleman in whom he could detect no other quality worthy of compliment, "that he had a great talent for silence." And some people are very valuable in that way. We have known people who could listen so inspiringly as to draw eloquent discourse from very ordinary people.

"The whole force of conversation," some one says, "depends on how much you can take for granted." The good listener may contribute to that force by intelligent nodding. We once introduced two friends who were going in the same car on an all-day journey. One of them was an inveterate talker; the other, also a good talker, could keep still when necessary. Meeting the latter a few months after, we inquired how they enjoyed that day together. "The doctor enjoyed it first rate," said the quiet man. "He began talking when the train started, and never stopped until it pulled into Jersey City, encouraged by only intermittent nods and smiles from me. Parting as we left the train, the doctor remarked effusively, 'We have had a good day; I don't know when I have enjoyed a conversation so much.'"

Talk and silence do make good conversation sometimes, if they be rightly adjusted to each other. Successful conversation assumes, in the first place, sympathetic people. There must at least be a willingness to get on common ground. Dr. Johnson once tried a fellow traveler in a stage coach on various topics and could get nothing out of him. At last the poor fellow, realizing the humiliating situation, in despair exclaimed, "Try me on leather!" He did and found an eloquent talker. He who can adjust himself to his company will always be entertaining. A good talker must have, in the second place, a good subject. Gossip leads to affectations. The man or woman having a worthy subject will talk naturally. Small natures talk about people, earnest souls talk about things. It is easy to be fluent in canvassing our neighbor's peculiarities, but one can't gossip about astronomy and Free Trade and inductive philosophy.—Boston Beacon.

HINDOO TIME.

The Curiosities of the Eastern Method of Reckoning Time.

The Hindoos also employed ages in the computation of time, and these, too, divided into periods of different durations. The present age is the kali yuga, or the age of iron; 4,985 years of it have already passed, but its total duration is supposed to be 432,000 years. The succession of the ages, counting back, is given as follows:

Fourth age—Kali yuga, age of iron, or of woe (the present age), to be of 432,000 years.

Third age—Dvapara yuga, 864,000 years.

Second age—Treta yuga, or age of silver, 1,296,000 years.

First age—Krita yuga, age of gold, or of innocence, 1,728,000 years.

These four ages form the maha yuga, or great age, of 4,320,000 years. The length of a patriarchate is seventy-one maha yugas, or 306,720,000 years, to which is added a twilight period of 1,728,000 years, making in all 308,448,000 years. Fourteen of these patriarchates, augmented by a dawn of 1,728,000 years, gives 4,320,000,000 years, which form a kalpa, or the aeon of the Hindoo chronology.

A kalpa is only a day in the life of Brahma, whose nights are also of the same duration. Now, Brahma lives a hundred years of the three hundred and sixty days and three hundred and sixty nights. The present epoch is the kali yuga, of the twenty-seventh grand age of the seventh patriarchate of the first aeon of the second half of the life of Brahma, who is now in his 155,521,972,818,985th spring. Yet the the whole life of Brahma is only a little longer than a single wink of Siva's eye!—M. L. Barre, in Popular Science Monthly.

MR. RUSKIN'S LATEST.

A Writer Who Will Not Be Popular With the Children of the Well-to-do.

In future, we should say, Mr. Ruskin will not be particularly popular with the children of those who are well-to-do, to judge from a letter he has been writing. The father, he says, "should never provide for his children. He should educate and maintain them to the very best of his power till they are of mature age." Then, "when they are strong enough, throw them out of the nest, as the bird does." "No fortune" should be "left to them." The "nest" should always be at their disposal—"father's house open, says Mr. Ruskin—but "nothing more." Mr. Ruskin does not say what he means by "mature age," so that we are left to fix the period of maturity for ourselves. Some would place it at one time, some at another. And, moreover, Mr. Ruskin does not tell us what is to become of the property which would, in ordinary course, be handed over by a father to his children, if he had it to hand over. Is it to go to the State, or to an institution, or to any other relatives than the unfortunate offsprings? "Honorable children," says Mr. Ruskin, "will have their own houses." But that is not always the case; and what is the use of the said children "providing for their parents," if the said parents do not require to be provided for? Mr. Ruskin is good enough to lay down that "no guilt should ever stand between child and parents;" but, though this sounds generous, it is not wholly intelligible. People will still want to know why, if they have the means, they should not "provide for" their children; and the only persons, we fear, who will salute Mr. Ruskin as a prophet are those who may be glad of an excuse for casting their progeny upon the world.—London Globe

AROUND THE CAMP FIRE.

THE SECOND ANNUAL REUNION OF THE G. A. R. ASSOCIATION OF SOUTHERN MICHIGAN

The Three Days Encampment Held Last Week at Devils Lake—A Large Crowd in Attendance—Lots of Music and Speeches—Camp Fires at Night.

THE FIRST DAY.

The G. A. R. encampment began on Wednesday morning of last week in John Brazee's grove at the north end of Devils Lake. The camp had been put in readiness and tents pitched the day before. The morning of the first day dawned pleasant, and soon after sunrise the vets began to arrive. Soldiers residing in the vicinity came in with teams, while the first trains on the M. & O. brought large additions to the crowd. In honor of the president of the association, Col. O. A. Janes, of Hillsdale, the camp was christened "Camp Janes."

Capt. B. F. Graves acted as commandant of camp and Lieut. W. F. Bradley as adjutant.

The location of the camp was a pleasant and beautiful one, on the east bank of the lake, in a handsome grove, from which the underbrush had been cleared up. The tents were arranged in military order, each row being assigned to a G. A. R. post, who with their friends occupied them. The tents were square, accommodating six to eight persons each. There were 204 tents up belonging to the state and in addition there were quite a number of private tents, some of which were very handsome and comfortably equipped. Each tent put up by the association was supplied with straw, the "vets" supplying their own blankets. The camp presented a beautiful appearance from the lake, the white tents showing through the green foliage in daytime, and the camp fires illuminating the grove at night. Certainly it would be difficult to find a more sightly location for a camp, and the officers of the association deserve the many words of commendation they received for locating the reunion at this place.

The attendance to-day was in the neighborhood of 8000 which more than met public expectation.

The first formal exercises of the day were held at 2 o'clock P.M., which consisted of the annual reunion of the 18th Mich. Infantry. When Capt. Miller, president of the association, took his place on the grand stand and called for order, he was surrounded by 150 or 175 members of the old regiment. In the absence of the regular secretary, D. H. Warren was chosen to that duty. Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $29.42 on hand, in view of which, dues for the year 1886 were reduced to 25c. The election of officers was next attended to, and resulted as follows: Pres., C. R. Miller; vice pres., first, Dr. S. P. Root; second, Henry Stevens; third, Fred Bay; Sec., D. H. Warren; Treas., L. B. Wolcott.

President Miller, in a few earnest and fitting remarks, returned thanks for the honor done him. A committee of three, consisting of H. W. Stevens, Dr. Root and Fred Bay was appointed to draft resolutions on the death of Col. Harvey A. Colvin and comrade Greer, the report to be made at the next reunion. An effort was made to fix the place for the next meeting, but every place named was voted down, and to get at a result a committee of three consisting of L. B. Wolcott, Homer Miller and A. Camburn, was given the work, which it did in short metre, naming Hudson, and authorizing the president and secretary to fix upon the day. This arrangement seemed to meet hearty approval.

Letters were then read from absent members of the association. Col. Doolittle the old commander of the regiment, very unexpectedly came upon the scene, and was at once the object of interest to the boys, who as they warmly grasped his hand, were greeted in hearty style. Nothing would do but a speech from the gallant colonel, who would rather charge a battery any time than try to make a speech, but he couldn't get out of it and, in fact, made a pleasant little talk to his old soldiers. Then followed several short talks by different ones, and these were supplemented by old army songs sung as only old soldiers can sing them.

Two bands were in attendance today, the I. O. O. F. of Blissfield and the Dundee City band, and the Jonesville double quartette did the singing.

In the evening a campfire was held. The old vets gathered about the grand stand, the band and glee club lent their assistance, and a kind of a military "love feast" was indulged in. Col. Janes explained what "a campfire" was, and then proceeded to "draft" the lucky ones who were to relate their army experience.

The first man drafted was comrade Mansfield of the old Fourth Infantry.

Next came Capt. C. R. Miller, who promptly toed the mark. His remarks were mostly a eulogy on Gen. Grant.

"Marching through Georgia" was sung and then short speeches were made by comrades Carpenter, of Ypsilanti, and Allen, of Battle Creek.

Then the singers rattled off "When Johnny comes Marching Home."

Comrade Howard, of Litchfield, responded to call with an address that convulsed the old vets. On a bit of cloth held up in view of the audience were sketches of different vermin the memory of which is yet green in the hearts of old soldiers. He said that the duty of praising generals and privates he left to others, his work was to speak of humble acquaintances made in army life yet seldom dwelt upon in speeches. With pointer he indicated each of those old friends beginning with the "grayback." These fellows took the cake; they were no respecters of persons, and after a march the private and the officer might have been seen back of the tent, engaged in a mutual hunt for their little friend who stuck with more than brotherly tenacity. So he went through with the list, accompanied by the uproarious laughter of his appreciative listeners.

J. H. Fee, of the Adrian Times, related his experience, and his remarks were highly appreciated.

Comrades Wade and Smith of Jonesville and Carpenter of Fairfield followed and then the camp fire broke up.

Dancing was indulged in upon the verandah of the hotel and the festivities were kept up until a late hour.

THE SECOND DAY.

This was the "big day" of the encampment. Early in the morning all the roads leading to the camp were lined with teams. Thousands came in this way. The morning trains both ways on the M. & O. road were crowded to overflowing. The train from the east carried a number of notables among whom were Gov. Alger, Congressman O'Donnell, of Jackson, Capt. E. P. Allen, of Ypsilanti, Gen. Sherwood, of Toledo, Col. Long, of Flint, and others. The number of people in the grove during the day must have reached at least 15,000. The camp was crowded and the tents all taken, but there was room enough for all. The detail for the day announced by Adj. Bradley, was as follows: Officer of the day, Fred Bay of Ogden, officer of the guard, J. F. Dickerson of Hudson, sergeant major, Jas. Davis, Dundee.

At 9 o'clock guard mounting occurred in the presence of a large crowd. The movements of the guard were a little shaky and uncertain sometimes, but the adjutant brought things into shape. The trains brought in a number of posts, several in good shape, notably that of Coldwater, which carried muskets and blankets, presenting a very soldierly appearance. The reunion of the old First Infantry came off in the forenoon. There were perhaps thirty members of the old regiment present. Capt. Manly, of Ann Arbor, was made president of the association. Comrade Griffith, of Jackson, was made secretary, and W. A. Edwards was chosen treasurer. A motion was passed declaring entitled to membership in the association all members of the old First regiment and those of the three months' organization. Jackson was named as the place for holding the next reunion, and the officers of the association were made an executive committee to name some day in May next.

The crowds continued to arrive during the entire forenoon, and by noon everybody was ready for dinner. So complete however were the arrangements and plentiful the supply of provisions that before two o'clock the thousands of visitors had been fed, and the fragments that were gathered up would have filled hundreds of baskets.

Promptly at two o'clock the officers and notabilities appeared on the grand stand, and the crowd collected around it to witness the chief literary attraction of the entire three days' reunion. Col. Janes presided, and the first speaker introduced was Gov. Alger. His speech though brief was well received, and put the boys in excellent humor. He was followed by Rev. J. M. Barkley, who had served in the Confederate army, who gave quite a lengthy address. Short speeches were then delivered by Congressman Jas. O'Donnell, of Jackson, Col. Long, Gen. Sherwood, of Toledo, Comrade Gurdon, of Jackson, and Capt. Allen, of Ypsilanti. Lack of space prevents our giving an abstract of these speeches. They were all well received, and they were interspersed with several fine choruses by the quartette club. Thousands of people continued standing for nearly two hours during these exercises, and were held interested till the close. It was a magnificent crowd to talk to, and the speakers seemed to catch the inspiration of the occasion.

At four o'clock occurred the dress parade in which all the G. A. R. Posts present joined. The Blissfield band and Co. C, M. S. T. of Tecumseh were also in line. The parade was one of the features of the days entertainment and was witnessed by almost the entire crowd on the grounds. The parade itself took place on the flat at the north end of the lake, while the rising ground to the north and east furnished a magnificent position for the spectators to witness the evolutions of the soldiers. The boys in blue at the bottom of the hill and the crowds on the surrounding slopes resembled a vast amphitheater which of itself was a beautiful sight.

The camp fire in the evening brought out another good crowd and an entertaining program. Col. Janes presided in his usually happy manner and the drafting began, the President remarking that every man who was drafted would be expected to bring a rail or a log to keep the fire alive.

Capt. Allen was the first man drafted, and he was followed by Capt. Graves of Adrian, Gen. Parkhurst of Coldwater, and Col. Pond of Quincy. Mrs. Emma S. Hampton, of the state woman's relief corps, then gave a very interesting talk setting forth the objects and workings of that organization.

Capt. Lardie, who was an orderly to Gen. Grant, and O. S. Rogers of Adrian gave their experience and the program for the day closed.

THE THIRD DAY.

The crowd was by no means as large as yesterday although it must have numbered 4000, and the weather was delightful. The detail for the day was as follows:

Officer of the day, F. A. Reynolds, of Coldwater; officer of the guard, S. S. Church, of Hudson; sergeant major, E. G. Babcock, of Adrian. Guard mounting attracted a large number of witnesses.

The business meeting took place at 10 o'clock, and the interest manifested in it showed that the boys realize that they have got a good thing in this association, and have no idea of putting it in jeopardy, or suffering harm to come to it. The following officers were chosen by acclamation:

President—Col. O. A. Janes.
Vice Pres.—Capt. B. F. Graves.
Secretary—Col. Smith.
Treasurer—Capt. E. P. Allen.

Members of the executive committee are to be elected by the respective posts in the organization, and the names of the persons chosen are to be promptly sent to the association.

The competitors drill announced to occur in the afternoon had been looked forward to with considerable interest, it being understood that there would be three entries for the prize, a handsome silk post flag worth $75. At two o'clock the crowd gathered on the rising grounds about the drill ground, and the three companies escorted by the camp band marched into the field. The judges, Capt. L. J. Allen, of Battle Creek, Maj. S. Howell, of Adrian, and Lieut. H. V. D. Baker, of Hillsdale, took their position.

The posts were called according to number. First came Butterworth post, No. 109, of Coldwater, with 28 men, Comrade N. A. Reynolds commanding. Next came DeGolyer post, Hudson, No. 110, with 27 men, Comrade James B. Dickerson commanding, and last, James Stewart post, No. 259, Litchfield, 27 men, Comrade L. A. Howard commanding. Marking was made on three points: 1st, uniform and appearance; 2d, marching and steadiness; 3d, execution. Each of the three companies did remarkably well, in view of the fact that the men saw active service almost a quarter of a century ago. The boys certainly had not forgotten the lessons of those days. The contest was very close between the Coldwater and Litchfield boys, and Hudson's delegation, did some fine marching, but the banner was awarded to Coldwater. The presentation was made by Col. Janes, and briefly replied to by Judge Reynolds. A second and third prizes, with due personal compliments, were given to Stewart and Detroiyer posts respectively. The judges had a delicate and difficult task, but their judgement was accepted as fair and impartial.

At the close of the drill the vets began to strike their tents and were soon on the march for home. Many left by teams, and the night trains carried the remaining ones. The universal expression among the vets was that the camp had been a grand success, and that these annual reunions must be continued, while the thousands of outsiders who visited the camp during all of the three days were equally well pleased with the proceedings.

About 800 names were registered at the quartermaster's desk, indicating that many members of the association were present. Following is a list of the posts present:

No. 2, C. O. Loomis, Quincy.
No. 6, C. J. Dickerson, Hillsdale.
No. 10, William Bell, Dundee.
No. 25, David Becker, Odgen Center.
No. 33, Myron Baker, Morenci.
No. 45, Woodbury, Adrian.
No. 88, Corbin, Union City.
No. 109, Butterworth, Coldwater.
No. 110, DeGolyer, Hudson.
No. 140, Beers, Tecumseh.
No. 185, Hackett, Bronson.
No. 189, T. S. Meade, North Adams.
No. 219, Henry Baxter, Jonesville.
No. 222, James A. Eaton, Britton.
No. 256, Archibald Stuart, Litchfield.
No. 273, Kennedy, Hanover.
No. 274, Lucius Taylor, Milan.
No. 277, Addison, Addison.
No. 282, James Rice, Camden.

BLANK CARTRIDGES.

Devils Lake is badly in need of a postoffice and a telegraph station. Col. Eldridge forwarded a petition for the establishment of a postoffice sometime ago. Everyone expected it would be granted some time since.

The M. & O. road contemplate building a depot and establishing a telegraph office there. Both these improvements will be made before the opening of another season.

It was the universal verdict that no better place could have been found in Southeastern Michigan for holding the reunion.

There was enough music on Thursday to satisfy the most fastidious. Six bands and a double quartette glee club were on the ground. Strains of music were echoing through the grove during every hour of the day. The bands present were the Blissfield I. O. O. F., the Dundee City, the Tecumseh Cornet, the Wheatland, the North Adams and the North Ovid.

Notwithstanding the immense crowd there was no lack of accommodations. Those who brought their own "grub" were, of course, satisfied, while those who preferred good square meals, found them at Brazee's Hotel or at the other hotels around the lake.

A well known Adrian lady was shadowed for an hour on suspicion of being the person who "lifted" Uncle Alvin's pocketbook. When her identity was learned a suitable explanation and apology followed. Both the officers and the lady were considerably amagrined over the matter.

Over 400 people were fed at Allen's Devils Lake House on Thursday.

The City of Hudson and Little Bevy did a thriving business during the entire three days of the encampment.

The crowd overflowed to the other resorts. Beardsell's and Allen's hotels on the south side were crowded with guests.

Pass. Agt. McHugh, of the M. & O., made his head quarters at the lake during the camp and was running back and forth each way on the special trains. Many of the specials were run under his personal supervision, and he was untiring in his efforts to promote the comfort of the passengers.

The M. & O. road, with the facilities at their command, did remarkably well, in accommodating the immense crowd.

The Blissfield I. O. O. F. band was employed by the Association and was on the grounds during the entire three days. The band has sixteen members, all of whom were present. Their music was first class.

The Co. C. delegation went up on the special Thursday morning and returned the same night. They had no thought of going until Wednesday, but over half the membership turned out. They made a fine appearance on drill and added an important feature to the dress parade of Thursday afternoon. Capt. Wood was highly pleased with the way the boys deported themselvys.

Beers Post, of Tecumseh, was there in good numbers but some of them returned home on Thursday evening.

Eaton Post, of Ridgeway, turned out to a man and they remained to see the whole show through.

The Addison Post was on hand with full ranks and made a very creditable appearance.

"Does the wine of life intoxicate" was one of the leading questions in camp. A few old vets were inclined to think that it did.

Butterworth Post took the prize banner and they deserved it. There was no kicking against the decision.

SIGNS OF RETURNING PROSPERITY.

It is undeniable that a better feeling exists in most business circles at this at this time than has been apparent for some time past. The cause of the perceptible awakening it would be idle to seek, for if there is any one thing which wise economists and sagacious business men have failed utterly to fathom or comprehend it is the underlying reasons for what are popularly known as good or bad times. It is enough now to know that nearly everywhere the feeling exists that things have been in the dumps long enough, and that business operations on a more extended scale may be entered upon with some degree of safety. This phase of the commercial and financial problem it is easy to understand. It is the return of confidence. When there is confidence there is prosperity, but when confidence is withdrawn many interests languish. Just now the brightness visible in the business world is due to the increasing feeling of security.

The corn crop, which is now practically beyond danger, promises an enormous yield, and this fact alone is of immense value to the general commercial situation. Though the yield of wheat is in many places disappointing, the prospect of higher prices is encouraging to the farmer, and, when considered in relation to the improved prospects in other lines, not disheartening to the consumer. In the iron industry, in railroad construction and in the countless branches of manufacturing there are evidences of new life, while the belief of merchants that the fall movement of merchandise is to be of more than ordinary volume is based on prospects and substantial information which are considerably more cheering than anything that has come to hand before since the collapse of values in 1881. With money plenty and therefore cheap, with a noticeable improvement in the willingness and ability of the people to buy, and with a most emphatic change in the ideas of moneyed men as to the safety of investment in productive enterprises, there seems to be no reason why we should not soon find ourselves once more a prosperous and contented people. The word "go" has certainly been passed along the lines, and, if the resumption of activity can be attended by conservatism and sound sense, there appears to be but one reason why the country cannot hope for a long era of prosperity.

That is the protective tariff. With the monopoly features of that oppressive and illusive system of taxation destroyed, and with the admission to our ports free of duty of all raw materials, the manufacturing and general mercantile trade of the country would receive a healthful stimulus which would be of inestimable value. When that time comes, as it undoubtedly will, American products will find their way to all parts of the world in increasing quantities, and, supplied on the one hand with open markets and relieved on the other of an unjust and burdensome taxation, America will be prosperous because it will be wisely governed.—Chicago Herald.

The Pretty School Ma'am.

'Tis now that the school ma'am begins to remember
She's drawing quite near to the month of September,
And having enjoyed herself through the vacation
She views its conclusion with much tribulation.
She feels so much happier, healthier, stronger,
She wishes the season would last a month longer.
She's been through the round of delightful diversions,
Has attended the Sunday School picnic excursions.
And seen many genteel and gentlemanly faces,
To be found at the fashionable watering places.
She feels that the school statute should be amended,
And the summer vacation should now be extended.
That she can't settle down to school duties so sober,
A single day prior to the first of October,
And the urchins, who sit on the dam catching fishes,
When they haul out a bull-head, will echo her wishes.

We received a letter last week—minus the contents. There was a four cent stamp on the outside and nothing inside. The envelope had been left unsealed and the contents had departed on some other road. Seal your letters.

Mr. J. H. Bortle and wife, of Saline were in town Monday, enroute to Devils Lake for a few days. Mr. Bortle lived in Tecumseh when a boy, and in the summer of 1852 he worked in the HERALD office when B. L. Baxter had the editorial management of the paper.

Among the recent arrivals there we noted these—J. S. Strong, J. L. Waldo, E. L. Hough, E. B. Anderson, L. B. Stevens, E. S. Tate and wife, E. G. Cook, J. Davidson, B. F. DePuy, J. H. Smith, Geo. Knapp, A. W. Slayton, C. A. McNeil, Webb Anderson, H. C. Conklin.

The venal editor of the Tecumseh Herald recently inveighed against the piety of a RECORD scribe, and was requested to name weapons and the time. He has chosen jack-knives. Had he selected the weapon so successfully used by Samson against the Philistines, both parties to this unhappy quarrel would have been "heeled" without expense. Nature armed them.—Adrian Record.

We cheerfully accept the amendment. These be hard times and even jack-knives cost money. Our jack-knife had not been purloined and "hung up" for cigars and that's where we had the advantage of editor Smith.

The autumn of 1885 was ushered in last Tuesday.

The Brooklyn fair will be held next week, Sept. 8th to 11th inclusive.

Mr. Brezee, of Morenci, the Agent for Lenawee County of Gen. Grant's Memoirs was in town Monday and Tuesday soliciting orders for that work. He ought to get a good list of subscribers here.

Jerry Root says: "The old Globe Mill will run right along just the same during Mr. Hayden's absence." Of course it will. Mr. Hayden is exceedingly fortunate in having so good a business manager. He can leave for a play spell at any time, and the old mill grinds right on.

After a brief sojourn there, they will visit Boston, New York and other eastern cities and will be gone several days.

An article on carpet bugs which originally appeared in this paper, was "pirated" by a Bay City newspaper, and since that time has been going the rounds of the state press conveniently credited to an "exchange." An editor always delights to see his literary efforts credited to an exchange. Carve 'em up without credit, brethren. We are not after fame, but simply aim to do good.—Adrian Record.

Last Monday the Adrian Record completed the first year of its record under the present proprietor. It is no disparagement to the many good newspapers of Lenawee County to say that the Record is among the best of them. It is one of the newsiest and spiciest exchanges that reaches our table. With Beakes at the business desk and Smith driving the editorial quill the paper is bound to prosper. The Record begins its second year with most flattering prospects.

The "Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant" will be published in two volumes. The first vol. will be ready for distribution in Dec. next, and will contain 584 pages, 38 chapters and 15 maps. The second vol. will be ready for distribution in March next and will contain over 600 pages, 40 chapters and about 40 maps. Valuable fac-similes of important letters and documents never before published, and fine steel plates and etchings, executed expressly for these volumes make it a work of inestimable value.

The Harbor Springs Daily Resorter of last Saturday contains this item:—Oscar. P. Bills returned to Harbor Point yesterday, having stopped over a few days at his home in Tecumseh on his way back from Mexico with Gen. Church. Mr. Bills enjoyed his trip very much, and saw much to interest and instruct. His descriptions of his journey and the people and institutions of Mexico, which are so behind the age as to be almost ancient, are very entertaining. Business there is dull, mining is the principal industry, the common people are ignorant serfs, the wealthy are too often ignorant bigots, the women lack intelligence and refinement, and the men are cruel and treacherous.

Those desiring to procure the "Personal memoirs of U. S. Grant" can do so by giving their order to Mr. E. A. Hodges who has been appointed agent for Tecumseh and vicinity. There are a number of other publications out, written and compiled by other parties, purporting to be the life of Gen. Grant. But those wishing the work written by the "Dead General" can only get it by giving their order to authorized agents. In order that the public may not be deceived we will give the names of the publishers and agents. The publishers of the real work of Gen. Grant are Chas. L. Webster & Co. of N. Y. The state agent for Mich. is H. G. Allen, of Grand Rapids. W. H. Brazee, agent for Lenawee Co. and E. A. Hodges for Tecumseh.

Will DesAutels, formerly of this place, but now attending school at Kalamazoo was in town this week.

Frank Hall, one of the graduates from the high school started for Lansing last Monday to attend the Agricultural college there this winter.

W. W. Cummer, president of the Cummer Lumber Co. and acting mayor of Cadilac, is putting in his vacation at the Mt. Clemens springs.

David McNah, Geo. VanTyne, Thos. and Geo. Adamson, went to Adrian yesterday as witnesses in the suit of The People vs. Wm. Carroll.

John R. Clarke will not speak at East Tecumseh on the 7th, on account of the annual School meeting that night, but Tuesday evening, the 15th.

The Clinton Woolen factory is now running a full force of hands and turning out about 5000 yards of cloth per week. They are making a very fine quality of goods.

Rain and cold weather are seriously damaging corn in Calhoun county, but oats, though suffering, will average nearly a full crop, and wheat a large and fine one.

Wm. McCowen, Tecumseh's old furniture dealer, has a new announcement in our advertising columns this week, which people should read. There is money in it.

The new course in mechanics will be opened next term, which commences Wednesday, at the state agricultural college. Tuition will be free and candidates must be over 16.

On Thursday evening, Sept. 17th. L. F. Wheeler will give one of his illustrated entertainments in the Opera House. The views shown will be in Holland, Norway, Sweden, Russia and Spain.

Miss Lula Monaghan, who has been spending her vacation with friends in Tecumseh and Jackson, departed yesterday for Calumet, to take her old position in the Calumet schools next Monday.

We hear that one of our citizens was chased by a large hog, while rusticating at Sand Lake, one day last week. He escaped being "chawed" up by the savage beast by taking refuge up a ladder.—Clinton Local.

Our friends will please bear in mind that the HERALD will go to press hereafter promptly at seven o'clock Thursday morning. All new advertising and local items must be handed in Wednesday forenoon.

Baptist services will be held at the Opera House until the church improvements are completed. The county press will please let us down as lightly as possible.—Hudson Gazette.

As the Baptist church of Tecumseh is in the same situation, we kindly refrain from any comments.

John Hughes, who works for Mr. Lilley had a severe attack of heart disease last Monday. While walking along in front of his house he suddenly fell to the ground insensible. Dr. North was called and he was taken in the house where restoratives were administered and he was made as comfortable as possible. He is now on the gain.

Mrs. Robert McCollum, of Franklin, met with quite a serious accident one day last week. She and her daughter had just returned from Tecumseh with the horse and buggy and while in the act of alighting from the buggy the horse started, overturned the vehicle and threw Mrs. McCollum out. She was badly bruised and two ribs were broken. It was a very narrow escape from a fatal accident.

Uncle Alvin Osborn and G. T. Harris, of Woodstock, were relieved of their pocket books at the G. A. R. camp. Mr. Osborn lost $30 and Mr. Harris mourns the loss of $175. It was a fine crowd for the light fingered gentry to operate in. We are a little surprised that Uncle Alvin should be caught in that way. He might better have paid double subscription on the Courier.—Addison Courier.

Grandma VanVleet, of this village, is now in the eighty-fourth year of her age, and is as hale and spry as a girl of sixteen. We are informed that during one year of her early life she made 100 pounds of butter, dried 1,200 weight of apples, spun and knit fifteen pairs of socks and did the chores and her housework, besides attending to the wants of a sick husband. Who beats this record or says that our ladies are being killed by work?—Addison Courier.

The most pleasant party that Tecumseh young folks have enjoyed this season was held at the Patterson house Tuesday evening. About sixteen couples were present and whirled around in the "mazy daizy" until the midnight hour. The dining room, which was used by the dancers was just large enough to accommodate those present, and the young manager whose efforts were the cause of such an enjoyable occasion, should be congratulated on the success of his undertaking.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

The fall term of the west Blissfield school began last Monday.

An Adrian man closed his store to attend the G. A. R. reunion at Devils lake.

John R. Clarke was "Hitting and Missing" the good people of Medina last week.

There are 25 postoffices in Michigan that will deliver letters under the special delivery system.

The gentlemanly burglar has been doing Fairfield, but he didn't find it a very fair field to work in.

Arrangements are in progress for a grand exhibition of horses and colts at Dundee, to come off soon.

A weather vane now surmounts the engine house at Morenci. They are always making improvements of some kind in that lively burg.

Fountain Valley is the name of one of Morenci's suberbs. It is a very poetical name, but sneak thieves steal chickens there just the same.

Adam Stetton's barn, in Ogden, was struck by lightning fifteen times last week and escaped uninjured. Ogden barns are proof against lightning.

Street Commissioner Jordan is casting up the highways of Tecumseh, and they do say that Jordan's is not a hard road to travel.—Adrian Record.

Very correct, neighbor, very correct.

Mrs. Love, of Blissfield, is ahead, at last accounts. Having repaired her dam, she announces that "she is now prepared to receive and grind all kinds of grain."

The Jasper schoolmaster walks four miles to his school in the morning, and home again at night. He must be too tired to wollop the scholars much during the day.

Mr. Stuck, of Lyons, Ohio, sued Mr. Schot for wages as fiddler in a dance band and attached a span of horses. The suit came off last week and Stuck got stuck. Schot shot ahead in the legal race.

Henry Holcomb will be tried at the next term of the Hillsdale county court for perjury, growing out of the trial of his brother Dan, who, with Jud Crouch, was charged with the murder of the Crouch family.

President F. A. Dewey, will be unable on account of illness, to attend the County Pioneer meeting to be held at Morenci this week. It will be the first Pioneer meeting he has missed attending in eleven years.

A Baptist minister was once asked how it was that he consented to the marriage of his daughter to a Presbyterian. "Well, my dear friend," he replied, "as far as I have been able to discover, Cupid never studied theology."

The speeding of horses on the Dundee track (Tecumseh street) is of frequent occurrence nowadays. It is said that the village ordinance limiting fast driving to six miles an hour has not been violated as yet.—Dundee Reporter.

The flowers are blooming as profusely as ever this year on the farm of the Cook Bros, just north of Rollin. The careful attention they receive from the ladies of the home insures the rarest of nature's gifts in beauty and fragrance.—Hudson Gazette.

Fairfield grange will hold a "long feet" festival in a grove near Baker's cheese factory, next Thursday.—Adrian Record. Well, well! We've heard about Chicago girls, but didn't suppose there was material right here in Michigan for a festival of that kind.—Evening News.

A bad job was done at the new cemetery last week. A man, advertising himself as an adept at cleaning marble, contracted with the owners of several monuments and head markers to clean them up, and put on a preparation, supposed to be muriatic acid, which completely destroyed the polish, and made the stones as porous as honey comb. There is considerable indignation over the affair.—Hudson Post.

Editor Smith, of the Adrian Record, visited Petoskey on the late press excursion. He remembers it too. He read John R. Clarke's late letter in the HERALD and broke out in the following soliloquy:

"Beautiful Petoskey" is the way John R. Clarke heads a letter from that celebrated resort of baggage fiends. Yes, we know it—been there. Baggage taken to the wrong hotel half a mile away. Baggage grabber wanted a quarter for misdelivering it. Said would see him in Chicago first. And yet we have no malice against Chicago.

During the excursion of the Michigan editors, in July last, a committee was appointed by the state association, to act in conjunction with a like committee from the western Michigan press association, to procure a testimonial for Hon. Perry Hannah, of Traverse City, as evidence of the appreciation the editors of the state had of his efforts for their pleasure and comfort. Funds were raised for the purpose, and the joint committee met in Detroit, on yesterday. M. S. Smith & Co. will manufacture the proposed memento, which will be ready for delivery about the first of October.—Adrian Times.

TRIED TO SAW OUT.

Yesterday afternoon Turnkey Smith at the jail thought there was considerable noise and hilarity among the prisoners. They were singing, dancing and apparently having a good time generally, and seemed to be disposed to make as much noise as possible. John became suspicious that all that noise was for the purpose of covering up some deliry, and going to a peep hole which commanded a view of the interior, he beheld one of the men industriously sawing away at the bars of a cell. All the cell doors were open but the access to the corridor around the cells was closed. It was evidently the scheme to cut the cell bars so as to furnish adumittance to the corridor from which the bars of the outer windows could be gained. If these could in like manner be sawed off escape would be easy. Sawing the outer bars could be accomplished in the night when the cells would be supposed to be securely closed. Smith observed the process of sawing for some time, till at length the sheriff arrived. There were several parties in the cell, the bars of which were being sawed. The machinery for closing the cells is such that all of them can be instantly closed from the office, it not being necessary to go inside the jail proper for this purpose. Suddenly, to the astonishment of the song singing sawyers, the cell doors closed upon them. Four were inside the cell in question, but one succeeded in darting into the hall between the cells before the doors closed. The other three were caged, however, and the officers proceeded thither after securing the others in the various cells. A search was made of the prisoners, and the bunk investigated from which was drawn forth a case knife, which had been nicked into the semblance of a saw, and indeed seemed to serve admirably in that capacity. Thus failed the little scheme for a general jail delivery. The names of the three men who were the principals in the attempt to escape are John Moore, William Carroll and August Ganschaw. Carroll is one of the subjects of sympathy who evoked a pardon from the tender heart of Uncle Josiah Begole, and was sent up for assault with intent to kill Dr. Hause of Tecumseh. Carroll has been repeatedly under arrest since his release. Ganschaw was arrested for the Clayton burglary.—Adrian Record of Thursday, Aug. 27.

INDIAN CUSTOMS.

A Woman's Experience in the Haunts of the Noble Red Man.

A woman of this city who has several times visited the frontier as a guest of acquaintances in the regular army was speaking the other day of her experiences last summer. She was one of a party of ten, among them two or three women from the East, who were visiting at one of the frontier posts. A gallant officer conceived the idea of a trip lasting several weeks, which should include the various Indian agencies and army posts of the Northwest. The women were particularly delighted with the idea and the party set out.

In speaking of Lo, the traveler said: "If you want to know what real dirtiness is, you ought, without doubt, to see the inside of an Indian tepee. And until you have do not consider yourself capable of judging in such matters." These uncleanly habits, she thought, were innate, for the Indians abhor water as much as a dog attacked with rabies.

At the Pine Ridge Indian Agency, considered the typical one in the country, and which is presided over by Agent McGillicuddy, is a mission school conducted by Mrs. McGillicuddy, a woman of superior education and refinement. The little Indian girls live in the school-building, which is conducted as are Eastern seminaries for young women. One day two of the little girls, about ten and twelve years old, ran away from the school and returned to the wigwam of their parents, who at once brought them back. Mrs. McGillicuddy thought they ought to be punished, and discussed with the squaw the advisability of a whipping, but was told in substance it would do no good; that the most severe and effective punishment possible to inflict would be an extra bath that week, which was administered, much to the discomfiture of the children. It had its effect, however, and they were among the most obedient thereafter. She agrees with all authorities as to the constitutional laziness of the noble red man.

A number of humorous incidents that happened while on the trip were related. While at one of the agencies, one Sunday, the Indians were gathered near the officers' quarters devoutly performing certain religious duties. An officer induced a young woman from one of the Eastern cities, who was possessed of a remarkably heavy head of blonde hair, reaching to the ground, to allow it to flow loosely and let the Indians admire it. She at once became the center of attraction, to the utter neglect of the religious ceremonies. They gathered about her in swarms, and manifested their pleasure at the sight by jumping about, rubbing their hands and gesticulating wildly. They pronounced it the finest scalp they had ever seen. The young woman was badly frightened, and the rest of her stay at that place was made rather unpleasant from the fact that the Indians manifested such an admiration for her that she was afraid to venture out. One evening during their stay at the Pine Ridge Agency the party attended church in the little Episcopal chapel. When they went in all was perfectly quiet, but services had hardly begun when they were startled by a terrible excitement among the Indians. Dr. McGillicuddy endeavored to quiet them, but was unable to do so. The cause of the commotion was that news had been received announcing the death of White-Thunder, a very popular Chief on one of the other reservations. The despair of the Indians seemed so intense and their grief so uncontrollable that the question was asked: "Why do they wail and moan so loudly?" It was explained that when a brave dies he who does the most and loudest mourning receives from the widow the choicest pieces of personal property left by the deceased. All of the property is thus given away by a "graduating scale" based upon the display of anguish made by grief-stricken friends.

The traveler related an incident coming under her observation which tends to dissipate the idea that the savage can not be civilized. It is the story of poor Enoch Arden in terra cotta tint, with slight variations.

There was one young buck, of industrious and frugal hibits, who, unlike his more trifling brothers, had adopted many of the white man's ideas, and by steady work at teaming acquired a comfortable cabin (instead of a wigwam), which he furnished in some taste, lived quietly with his squaw, and enjoyed the confidence of the white man. He went out on one of his regular trips, but did not return at the expected time. Search was made for him, but after the lapse of a week or so he was declared lost. The other braves at once began to mourn for him. This is said to have been the best, or perhaps the worst, exhibition of howling ever heard. It was exciting for the double incentive of securing the personal effects of the dead Indian and receiving the smiles of the rich young squaw, who was possessed of unusual personal charms as well as wealth.

Not unlike her white sisters in similar positions, this bereaved widow displayed considerable tact and executive ability. By her coy manners she had induced one fine young brave to outlast the others in the contest. His grief had been so intense that she rewarded him with nearly all of the personal property left by her lamented husband, and as a happy culmination gave him her fat, greasy hand in marriage. The honeymoon had only fairly begun when "the supposed deceased," who had apparently died intestate, put in an appearance, after an unusual and extended drunk. Right here is where Enoch Arden was outgeneraled. Instead of going away and leaving the young couple to spoon, this resurrected Indian asserted his rights, retook his goods, chattels, tenements, and hereditaments, including the gentle Annie, instructed the copper-colored Philip to "git," and he "got."

The simple, child-like vanity of the Indian is well illustrated by the following: At one post, "Young-Man-Afraid-of-His-Horses" came into the little photograph gallery, or tent, to have his picture taken. When the tin-type was shown him he went into ecstacies at the reproduction of his own manly form arrayed in Government clothes and whatever else he could accumulate on his person. To understand how complete was his joy it is only necessary to say that, in unbounded glee, he wanted a picture taken of his squaw, who was placed in position before the camera. Just as everything was about ready the "Y. M. A. O. H. H." wanted to see how his better-half would look. He put his head under the cloth of the camera, and, to his horror, saw she was standing on her head. He instantly jerked his head out from under the curtain, but saw her standing on her feet. Thinking he might have been mistaken, the Indian took another peep and saw she was again standing on her head. He remonstrated with her, saying she could not expect a picture to look like her if she persisted in standing on her head. The squaw denied any such acrobatic performance. Upon taking one more look Mr. Indian flew into a rage, grabbed his squaw by the shoulders, shook her violently, and dragged her out of the place, saying she was bewitched and should not have a picture until she learned to stand on her feet.—Chicago Tribune.

ADAPTATION IN AGRICULTURE.

Folly of Settling Facts Which Have Already Been Settled by the Experience of Others.

While every intelligent cultivator of the soil is doubtless well aware of the fact that the same kinds of plants and animals do not thrive equally well in all climates or under the same conditions, still there are comparatively few persons who pursue this subject further than what is forced upon them through dear-bought experience. It is quite true that experience is often the most direct medium through which a man can obtain the information or facts which he may be seeking, but it can scarcely be said in this age that all must travel the same road in order to secure the same amount of knowledge. Accumulated individual experience may be considered as at least a fair basis upon which to establish principles that will not mislead the inexperienced, even if they do not enable the novice to secure greater results. It is a waste of time, if nothing more, to repeat experiments just for the purpose of being able to say that you have settled certain facts or fallacies by actual individual experience. There is still room enough for experiments without going over old ground, and agricultural science has certainly reached a stage where some of the old and mooted questions may be considered as decided, and it is worse than folly to spend more time in their investigation. We have certainly determined the fact that there are climates and soils especially adapted to the growing of wheat; and while the natural limits may, by artificial means, be somewhat extended, it is a question if it will pay the agriculturist to undertake to force nature in such matters and try to raise crops that at best are uncertain, and in a majority of instances cost more than they are worth. To run counter to natural conditions is, however, one of the follies of a large number of agriculturists in all civilized countries, and perhaps nowhere are the numbers greater than in the United States, for here we have thousands of farmers and fruit growers who seem to be perfectly oblivious to all principles of adaptation as well as to ignore the experience of all who have gone over the same field before them. If a hundred or even a thousand men have utterly failed to make any special branch of agriculture a success in a locality, they will not be satisfied until they have tried it themselves. They will try to raise wheat on a soil only adapted to rye, and perhaps winter wheat upon land where it is almost certain to be thrown out by frosts in winter and killed, and do not once imagine that the results were due to their own ignorance or persistent stupidity. Now, it is well known that we have vast regions of country where both the soil and climate are especially adapted to the growing of wheat and oats, others for corn, rye, potatoes, and various farm crops; and while the farmer may by artificial means achieve partial success where natural conditions are against him, we should at least hesitate to advise others to attempt to do the same as a matter of business.

There are natural dairy regions where all things seem to combine in making conditions especially favorable for the production of milk, butter, and cheese. The pasture and meadow grasses may grow fully as luxuriantly in other localities and still dairy husbandry can not be made a success, the reasons for the failure being due to other causes than food. Low, moist soils in warm climates may produce more succulent food than high and dry land, and yet that from the former may be deficient in nutritive properties. Low lands also produce more food when used for pasture than high grounds, but they are never as healthy for cattle, and fevers, foot-rot, and similar diseases are usually developed on moist soils. What are called malarial regions are really as unhealthy for domesticated as for human beings, and should always be avoided by stockmen if they expect permanent and continued success in their business.

Large, heavy breeds of cattle, like the Shorthorns, are not adapted to hilly regions, where they will have to climb for their food; neither are they suited to the thin pastures of the Western plains, where they must travel a long distance to obtain sufficient food and water. The breeds that are light of foot are best for such regions, and the same is true of horses, sheep, and other stock. The stock raiser should keep these things in mind when looking for a stock farm, and, further, not expect to find any one breed equally valuable for all purposes. The long-sought "general purpose breed" has not as yet appeared, and until one is developed it will be safe to select the very best of those already known that are especially adapted to certain purposes and the conditions under which they are to be reared.—N. Y. Sun.

The Voice of the People.

The people, as a whole, seldom make mistakes, and the unanimous voice of praise which comes from those who have used Hood's Sarsaparilla, fully justifies the claims of the proprietors of this great medicine. Indeed, these very claims are based entirely on what the people say Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for them. Read the abundant evidence of its curative powers, and give it a fair, honest trial.

The story is told of an old hunter in Michigan who lost his way in the woods a number of times while the country was new. At length he secured a pocket compass and its use was explained to him by a friend. But shortly afterward he lost his way again and lay out as usual. When found he was asked why he did not travel by the compass. He did not dare, he said. He wanted to go north, and he "tried to make the thing point north, but it wasn't no use, 'twould shake, shake, shake round and point southeast every time.

DR. A. PRASSE'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels; Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS SAY.

What is a Mugwump?

The mugwump is a man who "belongs to himself, but whose vote both parties are very anxious to secure as election time draws near, however much they may abuse him for the rest of the year.—Boston Herald.

Good Advice to Temperance Men.

How can the Prohibitionists, the Good Templars, the Sons of Temperance, the members of the Law and Order leagues, the members of the W. C. T. U., and other temperance people of Michigan expect The Center to tower head and shoulders above all other temperance papers in the land which it really ought to do in the state organ of the "banner Prohibition state," unless they give it the preference over all other papers? First, subscribe for The Center, then subscribe for other temperance papers. Home interests are always of first value.—The Center.

Holding Three Jacks.

John Adkinson wooed Lucy Abbott in Ohio and went to the war. Letters grew scarce, finally ceased altogether, and Lucy gave up John as dead. Then John Geven married her. They had three children, and Geven died. Mrs. Adkinson-Geven's next husband was John Collins, a bad one, and Mrs. Adkinson-Geven Collins returned to her mother's home. Recently she received a letter from her first husband, now living out on the frontier, and for whom she has kept a reserve of affection. At the close of the war he heard that she was dead, and at once enlisted in the regular army, where he has remained. Hearing of her existence and vicissitudes, he wishes to remarry. She is willing. All the men she has married have been named John, and it is understood that she remarks that in the matrimonial game she has held three Jacks.—N. Y. Sun.

The Indispensable Essentiality of Hash.

A hash made of potatoes alone would not be a hash.—Boston Herald.

Oh, yes, it would be a potato hash. What constitutes the source-idea, the predominant characteristic, the indispensable essentiality, the hashness, so to speak, of hash? Our esteemed Mugwump contemporary evidently supposes that it is the idea of mixture, of blended ingredients, and possibly of the second day's cooking over. But our esteemed Mugwump contemporary is mistaken in this, as in some other things about which it undertakes to speak apodictically. If the Boston Herald had approached the metaphysics of hash more reverently, and had taken the trouble to gather from philological authorities such light as they bestow on the subject, instead of relying upon the vulgar conceptions of the second-class boarding house, it would know that the one essential quality of hash is its choppiness.—N. Y. Sun.

A Short Chapter of Don'ts.

Don't eat hurriedly and run as fast as you can go to catch a train. Don't try to jump upon a train after it has started or to leap from it before it starts. Don't stick your head out the window whenever the locomotive whistles. Don't work all day long as fast as you can work, rushing out for five minutes to swallow a bit of lunch. Don't fail to have warm dinners or drinks at midday four days a week. Don't imagine that life can be supported on white bread and fruit, or pie and milk, or work and pastry. Don't try to get along without meat. Don't continue to drink a little beer or whisky every day under the impression that you are a moderate drinker and that it won't hurt you. Don't work on for years without any rest or recreation. Don't rob yourself of sleep in order to have pleasure or be able to accomplish more in the way of work. Don't stay down town nights. Don't worry about this world or the next, or the price of wheat. Don't fret about the rascals that want to get in or the rascals that should be turned out. Don't smoke cigarettes. Don't bathe in Lake Michigan. Don't think you know all about managing a small boat in a storm. Don't tickle the rear parts of a mule, fool around the grip car or monkey with a buzz-saw. Don't be a corpse.—Chicago Herald.

Kindly Advice to the Boys.

An Eastern paper, the Academy News, having asked a number of distinguished persons to write for its columns a few words of advice to boys, received among other answers, the following: Dr. Lyman Abbott: "Whatsoever thy hand finds to do, do it with thy might." E. P. Roe: "Do one thing honorably and thoroughly and set about it at once." Ex-President Hayes: "Commit to memory and recite Brown's letter to a young friend." General Lyon: "No one will ever become a great scholar without constant study, close application, and without thoroughly understanding that which he may attempt before passing it by to take up something else." General Winfield S. Hancock, among other things: "Be truthful, never try to appear what you are not, honor your father and your mother." Rev. E. E. Hale: "Tell the truth. Keep the commandments. Do not drink. If you have anything to say, say it; but if not, certainly not." General D. S. Stanley: "That next to exact regularity in their hours for prayer and pious reading they allow nothing to interfere with their hours of study."—Philadelphia Times.

ROMANCE AND RETRIBUTION.

A Story of Love, Marriage, Robbery, Murder, Bankruptcy, Perjury and Litigation.

From the Cleveland Leader.

While rummaging among the old files and records of the United States circuit court clerk's office recently I came across the papers in the case of Treadwell against Hester. This case did not resemble the old chancery cases of the English courts in the respect that it was on the docket so long that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," but it was comparatively short-lived and replete with interest. The plaintiff was represented by the present chief justice of the supreme court of the United States and E. A. Stacy and John Whitbeck, and the counsel for the defendant, as appears from the pleadings in the case, were R. H. Tyler, R. P. Ranney and S. J. Andrews. Such an array of legal talent and ability being employed was enough in itself, in the early history of the bar, to excite a lively interest in the trial of a case; but when I add what, in legal parlance is termed "the facts of the case," it strikes me that to any one familiar with legal lore the interest in this one would be redoubled. The story is a tale" which I think will be of interest at this time.

Several years ago there resided, in the town of Hudson, Mich., a wealthy banker by the name of Elias Treadwell, who was known and respected in the community in which he lived and transacted business for his honesty and integrity in his dealings with his fellow men. He was possessed of by name William W. Treadwell, in whom he had great confidence, and than whom no young man ever promised better for the future. Being a man of means Mr. Treadwell thought to endow his son with everything that was necessary in the way of education, and at the conclusion of his common school course William was sent to Oberlin, in this state, to have the rough edges rounded off and be put upon the world with a good solid foundation with which to wrestle with the difficulties attendant upon an active business life. While pursuing his studies, he unconsciously became very much interested in and subsequently was engaged to one of the gentler sex who was attending the college at the same time with himself. She was of Samuel Hester, a very wealthy farmer residing in Norwich, Huron county, Ohio, and was accounted one of the brightest and most accomplished young ladies of her class. The contract entered into by these young people during their collegiate days was afterward consummated by their hands being joined in holy wedlock at the home of the bride's parents, and they removed to Hudson, Mich., to settle down, where the husband was taken into partnership by his father in the banking business. All went merry as a marriage bell for a while, when suddenly the community round was astounded by the announcement that William W. Treadwell had

of the funds of Treadwell & Co's private bank, and was supposed to have taken up his abiding place in Canada, which latter fact was afterward ascertained to be true. This action of course, so crippled the bank that it made and the creditors, hoping thus to obtain at least a part of the missing money employed detectives to shadow the young man during his sojourn in England's domains. But they failed, after a long time, to get any trace of him or the money. The young wife, in the meantime, returned to her father's roof, heart-broken, it was supposed, over the actions of her recent lord and master.

After several months' residence under "England's despotic rule" William H. Treadwell returned to this country and finally appeared one bright morning at a hotel in Mansfield, O., but under and so completely disguised that he was not recognized even by the detectives who had traced him to that place. Shortly after his arrival at the city above mentioned his father-in-law Samuel Hester, found his way to the same place in company with his daughter, and put up at a hotel not far distant from the one at which Treadwell stopped, but his daughter proceeded immediately to the temporary abode of her husband. The morning after Hester's arrival Treadwell and his wife, taking with them for baggage only started for the depot in an omnibus, calling at Hester's hotel on the way and taking him in with them. Just after the old gentleman had stepped into the the omnibus a couple of detectives presented themselves to Treadwell with a warrant took him into custody and immediately locked him up his wife accompanying him. He was subsequently removed to Adrian, Mich., and confined in jail, where he was placed on trial for larceny, and found guilty. Before sentence, however, he, in company with a convicted horse thief, a companion of his jail life escaped from the jail and they were never recaptured. As the two refugees from justice were wending their way through the country in search of liberty, the companion of Treadwell became cognizant of the small amount of money in his possession, and also coveted a watch that he carried. His desire for the ownership of these valuables so worked upon him that as they were passing thro a patch of woods one evening he

A SMALL BLACK SATCHEL,

IN JAIL

MURDERED

Treadwell and fled with his booty. He was shortly afterward captured in this city, removed to the vicinity of the scene of his crime there found guilty by a verdict of his peers and hanged by the neck until he was dead, in accordance with the sentence of the court. After the arrest of his erring son-in-law, Samuel Hester proceeded in the omnibus to the depot, being encumbered by no other baggage than the "small black satchel" before mentioned. Instead of taking a train however, as was his ostensible intention, he proceeded on foot to his home, a distance of twenty-seven miles.

The arrest, conviction and death of young Treadwell failing to bring to light the stolen money, the creditors of the broken bank, desiring to pursue their investigations further, employed the valuable services of Morrison R. Waite, then a practioner at the Toledo bar. After being made acquainted with the facts Mr. Waite advised the bringing of a suit against Samuel Hester for the recovery of the amount stolen by young Treadwell, which was accordingly done in the name of Chauncy L. Treadwell, who was appointed administrator of the estate of William H. Treadwell for the purpose of the suit, and the action above referred to is the one in question. The trial of the case resulted in a for the plaintiff in the sum of about $12,000.

When the plaintiff attempted to execute his judgment by levy upon the defendant's property, particularly his real estate in Huron county, O., he discovered that the old man Hester had, during the pending of the suit, so deftly managed his affairs that what of it was not covered all over with mortgages was safely stowed under in the name of the partner of his joys and sorrows, and the plaintiff was remediless.

The next step in this "strange, eventful history" was taken by Samuel Hester himself and it resulted in

of the whole matter, but it did not restore the life either of the broken bank or young Treadwell, neither were the remaining parties to the conspiracy made any happier thereby. At the time of the rendition of the above judgment, the United States bankrupt law of 1867 was in full force and effect. Hester bethought himself to take the benefit of it and he relieved of this indebtedness and accordingly filed a petition in the United States district court, which in the usual course of business was referred to Myron R. Korth, a register under the law. Hester being charged with having fraudulently transferred his property, an examination was called for and had before the aforesaid register, before whom Hester in his testimony so perjured himself that he was subsequently indicted by the United States grand jury for PERJURY.

The evidence against him for this crime was so conclusive that the old man was finally driven to the wall, and rather than take the risk of enduring his days in "the penitentiary of the state of Ohio," he compromised by paying the plaintiff's attorneys about the whole amount of the judgment and costs and was given a release in full.

SATISFACTION

In legal parlance "the moral of this case" is that Samuel Hester drew his son-in-law into a compact to carry out the terms of which William H. Treadwell was to commit the deed of robbing the bank, and they together were to share the "ill gotten gains" at such future time as it would be safe to meet and arrange a division of the plunder. It was always supposed that Samuel Hester paid the judgment with the actual money stolen from the bank.

The above, while in the main a correct statement, is in some particulars defective, and hence we add a few facts obtained from Judge Stacy, of Tecumseh. At the time of Treadwell's escape and robbery, he was the sole owner of the bank. No assignment was ever made, but the creditors attached his property wherever found. When he ran away he had nearly completed a fine house in Pittsford on the town line road near Hudson, now owned by John M. Osborn.

The criminal prosecution was conducted by Geo. Rhigsby Esq., Prosecuting Attorney, who was assisted by C. A. Stacy, of Tecumseh.

After Treadwell was lodged in Huron County, O., his murderer was prosecuted, convicted, and hung at Napoleon. The creditors employed C. A. Stacy to assist the State Attorney of Huron County, Ohio, on the trial. After this trial and sentence and execution of Treadwell's murderer Cowell, the creditors employed C. A. Stacy, of Tecumseh, and John Whitbeck, of Hudson, to commence a suit against Hester, and Hon. M. R. Waite, now Chief Justice U. S. Court at Cleveland, assisted and the creditors obtained judgment there.

A large number of trials were had in the Bankruptcy court at Cleveland and before the U. S. Commissioners which resulted in discovery of a large amount of property. The case in its details was wonderful. On every trial, after the plaintiff's had closed their side, it was very much strengthened by the defense and resulted in every instance in favor of the people, and Treadwell's creditors.

The Magazine of American History for September is a number of extraordinary and vital interest. It opens with an admirable steel portrait of General Grant, in military uniform, and its leading paper treats of the "Historical Associations of General Grant's Resting Place," at Riverside Park. This timely article, in response to the popular demand for precisely the information it contains, is from the pen of the editor, who is also the well-known author of the Standard "History of the City of New York." The second paper of the number, "Washington's First Public Service," is from the distinguished scholar, T. J. Chapman, A. M., and is extremely entertaining. Three excellent articles follow in the Civil War Series—"Baltimore in 1861," by Major General John C. Robinson, who was in command of Fort McHenry when the Massachusetts troops were assaulted in that city; "The Beginnings of the Civil War in America. The Confederates taking the Offensive" (third paper,) by General Thomas Jordan, who has traced with a steady hand the subtle causes leading to the firing on Sumpter, and General Meredith Read's second important and readable contribution on the "Military Affairs of New York State in 1861" while he was Adjutant-General of the State. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

BASE BALL.

The Return Game Between the Wolf Creek and Onsted Base Ball Clubs.

The return game of base ball between the Wolf Creek and Onsted clubs was played last Saturday on the Wolf Creek grounds and was umpired to the satisfaction of all by E. Hartenstein of Onsted. A crowd of several hundred spectators witnessed the game which was very exciting for the reason that several large bets were supposed to have been made on the result. Both clubs appeared in fine condition, the Onsteds won the choice and took the field. Five innings were then played without a run being scored by either side, when the Wolf Creek by superior playing and fine pitching of the Beaver brothers took the lead and won the game, the score standing 20 to 9 in their favor.

The game abounded in fine plays among which was the fine field catch made by the left field of W. C. and the 2-base hit by Snow of Onsted. The festive correspondent of the Adrian Press from Onsted was there and although he did not leave his "grip" on the train, he seemed to have lost something by the dazed sort of way he groped around after the game was finished. Beware! brother, don't count your chickens before they are hatched.

MOTHER'S OLD HYMN.

THE BLOODY MARK.

A Plain, Unvarnished Story of Remarkable Events.

In an age when scientific men are beginning to recognize the fact that there are certain forces, which, under certain mental conditions, manifest themselves by phenomena hitherto unrecognized or scorned as the result of successful imposture, a tale partaking of the marvelous should need no apology. Such tales, heard at second hand, have hitherto only served to create a pleasant horror. No element of truth has been ascribed to them; they are forgotten as soon as heard. Perhaps the story of an eye-witness may help people to understand that in this commonplace workaday world strange things are happening, and that the veil which divides the seen and the unseen is very slight and unsubstantial. There will be no need of craftily worded description. The plain, unvarnished story is strange enough.

The scene of my story is laid in the little college in Pennsylvania from which I graduated. It was barely ten years ago, but the college was very conservative, and holding to old traditions, resembled a boarding-school of to-day rather than a college. Among its petty rules was one that all "rehumming" should be done by lot—that is, a fellow was not allowed to choose his own roommate, but was obliged to abide by the man drawn for him by lot. How satisfactory a method could have been imagined I can not tell—however, such was the case. Has an invalid had been allowed to room alone. Directly below me, during my senior year, were two freshmen, a Westerner and a Southerner, who, by the curious system before alluded to, had been thrown together, though perfect strangers. Never had fortune made a worse selection. For the first term they managed well enough, though there were several quarrels; they were both of hot temper—but in the last term continued disputes, involving blows, often obliged me to interfere as a peacemaker. There was no remedy; they could not tell the authorities that they could not live in peace together. I think it was chiefly the Southerner's fault. He was a raw, ignorant lad from a rough mountain district of North Carolina, brought up by hard words and only instilled with the idea that it was manly to fight upon the slightest occasion.

One morning in December the Southerner was absent from the breakfast table. The Professor, who sat at the head of the table as monitor, inquired of the Westerner, Johnson, if his roommate was ill. Johnson replied that he had started to skate down the Schuylkill to Millsville in the moonlight to see some friends, and that he had not returned; that he probably had stayed over night. Nothing further was said at the time, but the Southerner did not return, nor did he visit his friends in Millsville. It was agreed that he must have fallen into an air-hole. The affair caused some excitement in the college, but was soon forgotten. It was agreed that if such had been his fate the body would be found when the ice broke up in the spring. It was noticeable that Johnson mingled rather more with the fellows—hitherto he had been a hard student.

As had been expected, one spring morning a body, supposably that of the Southerner, was found swaying up and down against the dam at Millsville. Johnson, perhaps, felt that I was his best friend in college. I liked the man—and when he was called to the inquest he asked me to accompany him. I disliked the idea, but could not refuse. There was a sickening sense of horror in the little white-washed room of the police station where the inquest was held. The plain wooden furniture, the group of earnest, troubled men, the bustling activity of the Coroner, the open window, with its view of the winding river and there in the corner the marble slab, the awful something shrouded in white, with the water trickling over the face from the half-turned faucet, form a picture as fresh in mind as though I had seen them only yesterday. Johnson was deathly pale, but on entering the room, as if impelled by an irresistable impulse, he approached the body and drew down the sheet from its face. A horrible fascination bade me look. In the bloated face blackened, with protruding tongue, one could not have recognized the Southerner. The head was bruised and battered by the ice, and there on the neck—the result of some collision probably—there was a deep, red mark, or rather smooch, that added to the ghastliness of the whole. How could Johnson bear so earnestly to gaze at it? How could he lift the hand as he did a moment to his lips? Was he sorrowing over the bitter disagreements, the hate he had felt for the unfortunate man?

He gave evidence in a low, firm voice to the effect that the drowned man had been on the river the night he had disappeared. The matter was quickly settled. We were returning a chance invitation showed me on Johnson's wrist, as it neared in the moonlight, a glimpse I obtained, a red mark. So terrible did it seem to my mind the horrible suggestion of the mark on the neck of the corpse that, assuring it was the hand which had raised that ghastly thing to the light, I grasped my friend's hand—but I was met with a "Nothing." I said in reply that I thought I saw something upon your hand. I remembered that fact, however, later.

The next morning I was awakened by a violent knocking at my door. It was just early by the clock; the sun had not yet risen. Wondering what this sudden summons might be I unlocked my door and first met Johnson, muttering and wringing his appearance indicating an extreme of fright. Falling into an armchair he lay back white with. Presently I threw some water in his face, and pressing a brandy flask between his teeth, urged on him a full draught. This had its effect, and he recovered sufficiently to tell me his story.

"Drake," he said, "I—I killed my chum."

Horror-struck I recoiled from him, but with an outstretched deprecating hand he went on:

"But, in God's name, not purposely."

Then, as if the confession had given him strength, he went on:

"That night we had quarrelled, and he came for me with a knife. I seized him by the throat, and held him back, God knows I did not intend to do it. In my blind rage and in fear of my life I held him until he fell, a heavy weight at my feet. What could I do? I worked to bring him back to life—did you not notice his face and the mark of my fingers on his throat? Oh, believe me! Believe me!" For the love of Heaven believe me!" he cried, falling before me and bowing his head between his hands upon my knees. And I—there was a sincerity in his speech that carried conviction of truth—I believed him.

"Johnson," I said, "I believe you. But why did you not tell the truth; you would not have been in danger?"

"In danger? No!" he exclaimed, starting up. "But could I have staid here? Would I not have had to go back to my old life and give up the college life I have so earnestly worked for? I could not have gone elsewhere. So I took the loathsome thing up, and through my open window I stole down over the fields, skulking in the shade, speeding over the moonlit places with all the horror of a guilty man. And I am guilty—now! Then down to the river, and the air-hole, and to see the body drop into the icy depths, and then rising through the black water, show the awful face with that bloody mark burning at the throat."

He spoke in rapid tones with rapid gestures, as he recalled the awful experiences of that night.

I sat frigid with horror. "It will turn his brain," I thought. I, "if I do not soothe him," and so carefully I quieted him speaking to him gently and slowly.

"You have been guilty," I said, "but you can yet make reparation. Make a clean breast of it all, and clear your mind of its trouble."

"I will," he said, "but not yet. Let me have but a day or two to compose myself. But I have not told you all. This morning, just before I came to you, I woke up and saw that horrible face at the window of my room."

"Johnson," I exclaimed now not doubting that his mind was going, "recall yourself. Don't let the horror of all this overcome you. There was no such thing. It was your imagination, man."

"I dreamed the whole thing over again," he said solemnly, "and waking with every limb trembling with fear, I saw it as plain as I see you."

"That is just it," I said, and I showed him that such an appearance was a natural consequence of his mental condition. There is no need of describing the means I used to quiet him, but finally convinced him. "At least," he said, "sleep with me to-night." This I promised readily. I stayed with him off and on all day. Toward night I had so far succeeded that he had become composed, and was fully determined to confess all to the proper authorities. We slept together that night.

I do not ask you to believe me. I can only tell the story as it happened. That night I awoke, feeling a strange uneasiness. Johnson was sleeping very soundly—the result of his intense excitement. A glimmer of dawn was in the room. Casting a glance through the room door into the study beyond, in the half light of the window I saw—Oh! the horror of it!—the exact similitude of that ghastly face, blackened, with protruding tongue, the bloody mark upon its throat.

I lost consciousness, and, when I came to, it was full dawn, and Johnson was still sleeping quietly at my side.

I said nothing to Johnson. I dressed myself, half dazed, and went out to prayers. Casting my eyes up at the window, what was my dread and awe to see on the sill a bloody mark. It faded out before my eyes as I looked.

"John Drake," I said to myself, "are your senses leaving you, that you allow your imagination to play such tricks with you?"

But though mentally I was convinced that all I had seen was nothing more or less than the results of horror upon my imagination, the awfulness of it weighed upon me all day; yet I determined not to be overcome. I resolved to sleep again with Johnson that night. He had awaked refreshed and composed, and told me that on the succeeding day he would make his confession.

That night I locked the study and the room doors, and after long wakefulness fell asleep. Will you believe me when I say I awoke with the same feeling of dread I had experienced the preceding night, heard the locked doors open, heard a shuffling step come across the study, enter the room we were in—it is no idle story that the hair bristles under great fear—felt a weight settle across my chest and lost consciousness? How long I lay in that condition I can not tell. When I came to myself the sun was shining in, a gentle breeze played with the curtain, the birds were singing, and the chapel bell was ringing. I raised myself wondering why I felt so weak. I had forgotten the night's terrors—but catching sight of Johnson all came back at the sight. His face was blackened, his tongue protruded from his mouth, a bloody mark burned dimly on his throat.

It was a wonderful thing that this climax of horror did not permanently affect my brain. It was a week before I was around again—the physicians regarded it as a wonderful convalescence. I told them the story in full as soon as I had regained strength. They nodded to one another as if it confirmed some decision they had made. "Mr. Drake," they said, "there is a very simple explanation to your story. Mr. Johnson was insane. He was of a morbidly conscientious temperament. There was no doubt about the cause of the Southerner's death. He died by drowning. Johnson, affected by his death, remembering their continued disputes, the hate they felt for one another, grieved so deeply over the fact that death shut off all chance for reconciliation, and in his self-accusing contrition actually began to believe that he had killed the man. The post mortem examination reveals not only the fact that he died from the effects of an unsuspected chronic lung trouble, but also that he was insane.

"But why, if he was busied in self-accusation," I asked, "did he mingle so much more with the fellows?"

"The last struggles of sanity to drown the voice of insanity," they replied.

"But how can you explain the apparitions?—the bloody marks on his wrist, on the window, and on his throat?"

"All fancy? Is it wonderful that a horrible tale, told as he told it, with all the aspect of truth, should have affected you? You say you told him his imagination was deceiving him. You had better have looked out for your own. As for yourself, go to some quiet country village, and neither read nor write but walk and talk and live easily and pleasantly, giving your brain an entire rest for at least three months. If you don't you may have brain fever."

It may have been fancy, but you could not, with every argument conceivable make me believe in the unreality of what I saw and heard.

This is my story. Explain it as you will.—Hartford Times.

HOME-MADE ELECTRICITY.

The Inventions Which Are Revolutionizing Household Economics.

We can not allow another week to go by without calling the attention of all those who are interested in the application of electric light to the dwellings of every day people to the beautiful portable table lamps just completed and exhibited for the first time in the Eastern Arcade, which seems to have solved the difficulty over which electricians have been breaking their heads for some time past in a manner so simple and so complete that the question arises, as it often does when a difficulty is finally solved, why did no one think of it before? And yet it has taken three years of hard and continuous work to bring to its present perfection a lamp which is within reach of any ordinary home, and which after the first expense costs the very moderate sum of two cents an hour to burn, while it has all the brilliancy and softness of the best incandescent lights. The difficulties in domestic electric lighting have been that all the applications of it hitherto invented have required a dynamo, involving a considerable amount of horse power. For these reasons, no one unable to go to enormous expense could attempt it.

Inventions for storing electricity by the dozen came out, but the electricity always managed to ooze away. Then arrangements were attempted for having central stations and laying electric light on to the houses in a given area, much in the same manner as the gas companies do now; but unexpected difficulties arose here about the stations, and, though this plan has succeeded in some of the foreign capitals, London remained behind as she generally manages to do in such matters. Men of wealth have, one by one, been lighting up their charming houses in this manner, but to the ordinary man of moderate means, and in all houses of limited incomes, it has been hitherto beyond reach. Now comes the table lamp, and to all appearances it is likely to revolutionize domestic lighting.

The solution of the problem is that there is no horse power required, no dynamo, no wires. The light, which is extremely brilliant, is produced from a galvanic battery contained in an oblong box, which fits into a case, which may be of china, wood or metal. The lamps at present being exhibited are in repoussé brass cases, and we doubt whether any better form can be given to them than this. A certain measurement is necessary to allow for the battery itself and the receptacle for the acid solution, so that when not in use or when it is wished to moderate the light, the zinc plates may be wound up—which is done by a small crank in the side—either completely free of the solution or so as only to leave a small portion in it. The solution itself is said to be extremely weak, so that no danger is likely to occur from the pouring away of the spent acid when the lamp is trimmed, which is done simply by filling the receptacle with fresh solution. The lamp is warranted to burn over six hours at full light, and for much longer if turned low. In its present form it is chiefly applicable for halls, libraries or dining rooms. But a hanging lamp is about to be introduced, and the patentees have already provided a number of special designs in hand-painted china.—London News.

CÆSAR.

History of a Warlike Politician who Died Before Susan B. Anthony was Born.

Cajus Julius Cæsar was born 100 years before Christ, and was one of the most remarkable men that ever lived. He was remarkable as a scholar and a statesman, and also for the odd manner in which he spelled his name. In 83 B. C., Cæsar divorced his then wife, if you will allow me that expression, on the ground that she had utterly failed to support him. Her maiden name was Cassutia. He then married Cornelia, the daughter of Cinna. Sulla, then in the height of his power, commanded Cæsar to divorce Cornelia or be proscribed. Cæsar then told Sull to shoot his dye stuff. "Go ahead and fly up the creek," said Cæsar, one day. "Crick your whip. You can proscribe for me if you want to, but you can't compel me to take your old proscription."

Sulla once said to a friend, referring to Cæsar: "In that young man there are many Mariuses." Probably that was the reason Sulla proscribed for him. Whether the Marius was a species of microbe or not, I do not know. I can not remember so far back.

Soon after this Cæsar went to Asia Minor as a Roman soldier. While on his way to study oratory with Appolonius Molo, he was captured by pirates. He used to threaten, while in captivity, that when he got his liberty he would put the pirates to death. The pirates used to laugh at this a good deal, and regarded Cæsar as the rising young humorist of Rome; but when the required ransom was paid, the historian says Cæsar manned several wheat barges and put for the pirates' lair, and having captured them, he crucified them all. Cæsar made a specialty of crucified pirates, and for years after that any one who had pirates that they wanted crucified would always bring them to Cæsar.

In the year 68 B. C., Cæsar was made quæstor, and in 65 B. C. he was made ædile, but he had a robust constitution, and he pulled through all right, never repining nor complaining, and steadily refusing to allow any one to proscribe for him. He often said that a Roman proscription filled out by a Roman druggist was worse than a case of malignant Roman botts.

At the time of the Catiline conspiracy Cæsar was in the Senate. A majority of the Senate favored putting the conspirators to death, but Cæsar opposed it in a speech two hours long, in which he worked in a great many Latin quotations. He was then accused of complicity with the conspirators by Cato.

In 62 B. C., Cæsar, who had barely escaped the conspiracy trial with his life, was made prætor and the following year proprætor, but he had been vaccinated and so escaped. In 60 B. C., he formed with Pompey and Crassus the first triumvirate, a kind of blind pool for passing any kind of a bill they thought would be a good thing.

Cæsar then went into the war business, and it was a cold day when he did not sound from one to five tocsins, and with a loud whoop go on the war path. Every little while he would fire the culverin, and then you would see him roll up his pantaloons with great sang froid and wade in blood. He did not care whose blood it was, so that is wasn't his own and so that it was warm.

Cæsar's daughter, Julia, who became the wife of Pompey by request, afterward died, and a coolness sprang up between Pompey and his father-in-law, for Pompey was a leader of the aristocracy, while Cæsar ate pie with his knife in order to conciliate the common people.

Cæsar soon found himself at the head of a small army and Pompey at the head of another. He was ordered to disband his forces, which he agreed to do, provided that Pomp would do the same, but the latter refused, and on the banks of the Rubicon, with 5,000 infantry and 300 cavalry, he considered the perilous situation of going to war against his son-in-law. After thinking it over for a long time he finally exclaimed: "The die is cast." His language was at once telegraphed to the New York papers and has been used with more or less success ever since.

He then crossed the Rubicon and marched on rapidly to Rome, where he made it red-hot for Pompey. Pompey soon took his troops and went over to Greece, where it was cooler and where Cæsar could not follow him without getting his feet wet. Soon afterward, however, the two enemies met on the plains of Pharsalia. Pomp had 52,000 troops, but Cæsar succeeded in putting the kibosh on Pomp, who went to Egypt, claiming that he and Cæsar never could get along together, and as Cæsar would not go to Egypt, he would go there himself. Pompey was afterward assassinated by parties who are still at large. It is thought that they are concealed somewhere in Canada.

When Cæsar had cleaned out a large army, he would make a report to the Senate something like this:

To the President of the Senate:
SIR—Veni, vidi, vici. Yours truly,
CÆSAR.

He was afterward made imperator or emperor for life or during good behavior, with a large salary. This office he held with marked success until the ides of March, 44 B. C., when he was assassinated by a committee of influential citizens, who waited on him for that purpose.

Cæsar's great coolness in a crisis is here most noticeable, for while surrounded by assassins and with his system full of large irregular holes, seeing Brutus, whom he had been led to believe solid, he exclaimed, "Et tu Brute," and expired. In the excitement naturally incident to an assassination, in which Cæsar had been chosen to act as the corpse, his great sang froid in addressing Brutus in perfectly correct Latin shows that he well deserved the tribute paid him by an eminent historian, whose name at this moment has escaped my memory, in which he stated that "Cæsar was no slouch."—Bill Nye, in N. Y. Mercury.

—By falling from a wagon a Chinaman in California, whose life was insured for a large amount, was seriously hurt. There was some doubt as to his ever getting better, and at length one of his friends wrote to the insurance company: "Charley half dead; likee half money."

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. Hood & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores, so also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it. Although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of your Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles Hood's SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half bottle of it at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of it on account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,

LONG-LIVED PEOPLE.

Features of a Classified Record of Ten Thousand Centenarians.

Joseph E. Perkins, a newspaper dealer of this city, is about to publish a book entitled "The Encyclopedia of Human Longevity," which is the result of thirty-eight years of investigation on his part. The book will contain an authentic record of a large number of people, men and women, who have attained the age of one hundred years or more. The only exception to this is the case of a man who died at the age of ninety-nine years and three hundred and sixty-four days; and whom Mr. Perkins regards as virtually a centenarian. The book will represent an immense amount of labor and research, and its author believes that it may be relied on as accurate in every instance.

"I have," said Mr. Perkins, in speaking of his book, "more than ten thousand instances of people who have lived one hundred years and more. These names have been gathered from every part of the globe. This country leads in longevity and Connecticut is at the front among the United States. In that State I have gathered statistics in regard to more than six thousand persons who were more than eighty years of age, and of this number twenty were beyond the century limit. As regards sex the majority of these ten thousand centenarians were women. I account for this by the fact that they lead less irregular lives than men. I have instances of fifty old maids who come up to my century standard, and only twelve bachelors. As regards occupation I find that sailors, soldiers and farmers are the longest lived. Among the professions I have the instances of one hundred ministers who lived to one hundred years and more, while I could find only thirty doctors, ten lawyers and ten actors who came up to the standard. I can find no case among my ten thousand of a newspaper man who has lived to be one hundred years old. Newspaper men do so much brain work that they die young."

Coming to special instances, Mr. Perkins added: "Among the oldest people in the United States were Flora Thompson, a negress of Nashua, N. C., who died at the age of one hundred and fifty years; Betsy Frautham, a native of Germany, who died in Tennessee at the age of one hundred and fifty-four years; and Sifis, a slave, who died in Virginia, one hundred and eighty years old. I have the cases of ten persons who lived in safety for one hundred years and were then burned to death. In Onondaga County I have the sketches of fifty centenarians. Among them is the Rev. Daniel Waldo, who died in 1864 at the age of nearly one hundred and two years. For more than sixty years he was a clergyman in the Presbyterian Church, and on the anniversary of his one hundredth birthday he preached a sermon in the First Presbyterian Church of Syracuse. The last six pensioners of the Revolutionary War were centenarians and I have their photographs. Then there was John Weeks, of New London, Conn., who married his tenth wife when he was one hundred and six years of age and she only sixteen. He died at the age of one hundred and fourteen. His gray hairs had fallen off and they were renewed by a dark growth of hair. Several new teeth had also made their appearance, and a few hours before his death he ate three pounds of pork, two or three pounds of bread, and drank a pint of wine. Nicholas Schathcowski, of Posen, was another old fellow. He deposed on oath before the Council of Constance, A. D. 1414, that he was one hundred and fifty years of age, and that his father, whose age at the time of his death was nearly two hundred, could remember the death of the first King of Poland, A. D. 1025. Among the oddities to be found in my book will be the photograph of a man who died at the age of one hundred and twenty-one years. He had one hundred and forty-four children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and outlived them all. Then there was Margaret McDowal, of Edinburgh, who died at the age of one hundred and six. She married and survived thirteen husbands. John Rovin and his wife, of Hungary, lived together as man and wife for one hundred and forty-eight years. He was one hundred and sixty-four and she was one hundred and seventy-two years at the time they died, and their youngest son was one hundred and sixteen years old when the parents died.

"Then there is the case of a man who married sixteen times and had no children. This case is offset by that of another centenarian who had forty-nine children. John Riva, an exchange broker of Italy, lived to the age of one hundred and sixteen years and had a child born to him after he was one hundred years old. Betz, a Sioux squaw, who died a little while ago, lived for more than one hundred years. She had been the wife in turn of an army officer, an Indian chief, a border highwayman, and a Methodist minister. William Ward, of Westchester County, died in 1778 at the age of one hundred and seven. He was a member of the Ward family who were among the earliest settlers in Westchester County, and the particulars of his life and death were given in the New York papers of the time. His brother John was a magistrate, and attended court in White Plains as late as 1773. William Ward, a member of this family, carried on business as a banker in 1883 at No. 52 Broadway, New York. Another queer incident is that of a centenarian who was married four times and had a daughter by each wife. These daughters married, and each of them had fourteen children. Then there was a man who went over the century line and had twenty-two children. His first was a boy, and girls and boys came after that in regular rotation. There was a person known as Elizabeth Page, who lived in London and died at the age of one hundred and eight years. This person had acted as a midwife, and was supposed to be a woman. After death, however, it was discovered that the supposed woman was a man."—Syracuse (N. Y.) Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

LIFE IN SIAM.

The King With Three Thousand Wives—A Great Elephant Hunt.

"The King is a man of about thirty-two. He is a pleasant, intelligent and well-meaning man. He speaks English. His secretary is also his half brother. It is easy enough to secure an audience. There is very little ceremony, considering that it is an Asiatic court. I would, for instance, address a note to the secretary and say I wished to have an audience with the King. A reply would come promptly, agreeing to request. I would don a full dress suit, present myself at the gates of the palace, be received by the guards, passed along by different functionaries until I reached His Majesty's presence. He would shake hands with me in ordinary European fashion, listen to what I had to say, and when I had finished I would rise and bow myself out. When I told my English and French colleagues that I never awaited the King's pleasure to terminate the interview, but always rose when I stated my business they were somewhat surprised. They regarded it as a breach of etiquette, but the King, I am told, liked it very much.

"The King is a very much married man. He has some three thousand wives. The establishment where they are housed is a city almost in itself. They are kept very close from the eye of men. No Europeans and very few natives of the male sex are allowed to enter the sacred precincts. Mrs. Palgrave, the wife of the English agent, did get permission once to visit the Queen's establishment. There is, by the way, only one Queen, the others are merely concubines. It was very plainly furnished. There was no splendor, gorgeousness and all that sort of thing at all. The floors were marble and the women sat on mats and rugs. They were chewing the betel root and constantly spitting; spittoons abounded. A few hangings were all the decorations the walls had. The women were very much like the Chinese women. The head is large, the face broad, forehead low, the cheek bones prominent, the lips thick, the eyes black, though not upturned as in the case of the Chinese. There is, of course, a whole army of female attendants."

"Now something about Siam's politics?"

"Well, you know it is an absolute monarchy. But there are two parties, or rather factions. One is headed by the King, and the other was led until recently, when he died, by the ex-Regent, who governed during the minority of the present King. There exists a great deal of jealousy, and as the crown does not descend by right of primogeniture, the death of a ruler gives rise always to serious trouble. The present dynasty has held sway for about four generations. I had a little difficulty when the ex-Regent died, which did not, however, lead to any serious consequences. He was a sour old gentleman, querulous and cross. I paid him a visit in my official capacity, and so did the English and French agents in theirs. He returned their calls, but did not return mine. When he died all the foreign representatives half-masted their flags according to custom. I did not. I was requested by the Prime Minister to do so. I refused. I said that a man who had shown so little respect for the flag of the United States should not be honored by it when dead. The matter was reported to the King. He said nothing. But when I saw him later he told me that he was very glad I acted as I did. It taught the followers of the ex-Regent a lesson.

"The King remembered General Grant very well. When I left Siam he charged me with a message for him. I was prevented through General Grant's illness from delivering it. Altogether I succeeded very well, indeed, in gaining the King's confidence. When he received me in audience for the last time he said: 'I hope you will come back. General Grant had two terms. You ought to have two terms also.' He presented me with two decorations, and also wished to present me with a valuable piece of property. This, however, I refused. But I induced him to give it in fee simple to the United States for the use of a Legation, the first instance in which a similar gift has been conveyed to the United States by a foreign power."

General Haldeman, among other interesting experiences in Siam, was able to be present at a Royal elephant hunt. This was by special invitation of the King, who further distinguished him by requesting the General to take a seat by his side. The wild elephants were decoyed into a sort of corral or lockade by tame elephants. Over a hundred were caught on this occasion.—Interview with Minister Haldeman, in N. Y. Tribune.

Keeping His Hand In.

Sambo was out in the back lot basting a poor dilapidated mule with a club, when a neighbor came along and stopped him.

"What the dickens are you abusing that mule for?" he inquired.

"Cause I wants ter keep my han' in. De old woman's done gwine off fo' fo' weeks, an' ef I fo'git how ter ack, I'se afeerd she won't reckonize her husban' when she comes back an' 'll be tryin' to git er divo'ce. The development of sport in America has been rapid and profitable. Out-door exercise is what is needed to build up our frames and make us a nation of strong men. An important and valuable adjunct in this work is Mishler's Herb Bitters, which possesses ample tonic properties, and is invaluable in all nervous disorders, dyspepsia, liver, kidney, lung and heart troubles. It strengthens and invigorates as nothing else will.

LONDON.—In a recent trade-mark suit it was shown by sworn evidence that over nine million bottles of St. Jacobs Oil had been sold here during the past few years. Leading chemists certify that the sale of this remedy exceeds that of all others; and that it is being recognized as the best pain-cure ever discovered. In serious rheumatism it has accomplished astonishing results.

A smooth complexion can be had by every lady who will use Parker's Tonic. For promptly regulating the liver and kidneys and purifying the blood, there is nothing like it, and this is the reason why it so quickly removes pimples and gives a rosy bloom to the cheeks.

Salvation Oil kills pain ever time. For cuts, bruises, sprains, strains, burns, scalds, and frost-bites it is an infallible cure. Price only twenty-five cents a bottle.

Remarked by R. C. Joiner of Allen, P. O., Hillsdale Co., Mich.: "Nothing gave my rheumatism such quick relief as Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil—believe it infallible for rheumatics."

SUNDAY EXCURSIONS.

Being fully convinced that the press is the foremost and prime medium for the redress of wrong and for the vindication and support of right in any community. I therefore consider it incumbent upon every moral conscientious, and christian man or woman to hold up and expose to public contempt and condemnation any glaring sin or evil that may come under their notice. I will not exhaust your precious time and patience with any long preamble but come to the pith of the matter at once. I refer to the Sabbath excursions to Devils lake and elsewhere. More appropriately called, Satan's sink hole. What a contrast to the true christian in God's earthly tabernacle pouring out in soul felt prayer his heart felt thanks to his God for his undying love and mercy to all mankind, and even as he raises the consecrated cup of holy communion to his lips in remembrance of a Saviour's love to sinful man within ear shot almost within sight, the iron horse is bearing hundreds to whatbourne I can tell you for I have traveled a similar road but have now switched off on to another track with another conductor in charge, to the terminus of sin, drunkenness, and debauchery to end in the loss of an immortal soul. Now Mr. Editor, let your keen eye and sharp witted reporter take a trip with this motley crew and keep his eyes about him. Now let him take a bird's eye view of his surroundings, with note book and pencil in hand, and make record of what he sees and hears. He will see here and there a young man hardly out of his boyhood draw an object from his pocket, an object more deadly than the death dealing corbra of the Indian jungle, for the latter destroys the body only, the former both body and soul eternally for St. Paul says, no drunkard can enter the Kingdom of Heaven it is handed around for the inspection of his companions, it is fondly embraced and placed to their lips with smiling pleasure, and this is oft repeated. The fume of the demon mounts to their befogged brain, the blasphemous oaths, the ribalded jest the obscene badinage flows from their lpolluted lips in a black and appalling stream. Notice their return as they leave the cars, see the unsteady gait, the bleared and bloodshot eye, vacant idiotic and meaningless stare without one thought of their soul, their God or their Saviour, thus they reach their homes. What a heart rending sight for a christian parent. In such manner is God's Holy Sabbath desecrated and profaned by many of the promising youth of our fair village and vicinity. Should the Almighty God in his retributive justice smite us with some dire calamity, such ones would be the first to fly to some christian and God serving friend for that consolation which he has bartered away for the pleasures of a fleeting and hidious sin. To you enlightened and God serving ministers of Christ's holy gospel, what an herculian task you have to battle with. Well may you say as of old, the harvest is bountiful but the laborers are few. Call upon your christian congregations, let our fervent prayers ascend as of one mighty voice to the mercy seat of an outraged but loving and merciful God, endeavor by every means in the power of a christian community to enlist the aid of the moral and philanthropic in your midst, appeal to the strong arm of the law; if no such law exists on the statute books of the state of Michigan, appeal to our enlightened legislature, that in the name of the God which they serve and for the cause of suffering humanity to enact such a law, leave no stone unturned until the hidra headed demon, I profanet of God's holy but desecrated Sabbath, shall be plunged headlong and howling into the voracious and implacable maw of Satan's sink hole. COM.

An exchange gives the following good advice: "If you can think of anything that can be done to beautify and build up your town, go and do it; keep your capital at home; patronize home industries; help the merchants to sell more so they can sell cheaper; always get your work done in your own town if possible; subscribe and pay for your own papers; don't borrow or steal the reading of them. If you follow these suggestions and your town does not prosper and build up, it will not be your fault."

MAKE THE MOST OF THE CORNSTALKS.

Cornstalks, when saved in their best condition, are regarded by experienced farmers as among the most valuable kinds of fodder. We have heard farmers who knew pretty well what they were talking about, say they would as soon have the cornstalks from an acre of corn, if we l secured, as the hay from an acre for feeding milch-cows. We have heard others say they thought the stalks, properly saved, would pay for growing the corn. We are aware that these conclusions were not based upon accurate scientific experiments, either in the analysis of the two fodders or in feeding to stock and accurately weighing them to determine results; but they were based upon general observation, upon the fact that the quantity of milk, the amount, color and quantity of butter is quite as large and good when feeding stalks as when feeding hay, and the stock thrive quite as well.

But the quality of the stalks may be greatly impaired and their value diminished by exposure for a long time to changeable weather. Farmers think that hay is almost spoilt if exposed to two or three weltings after being cut, but they will expose cornstalks for two or three months to rains and sunshine, frosts and dirt without considering that they are diminishing their value. How to secure the cornstalks with the least detriment to them, is a very important question to every one who grows corn.

When the writer took his first lessons in farming the farmers in the locality universally topped their corn. With a sharp knife they would cut off every stalk bearing ears just above the top ear, and when they had gathered an armful would lay it upon the ground between the rows they were cutting and the rows of standing corn. Returning, they would add a few more rows to the row of gavels. Afterwards they would bind the gavels in bundles, set them up in shocks, and as soon as they were sufficiently cured would draw and stack or hence them. This enabled them to cure the better part of the stalks without long exposure to the weather, and those stalks were very valuable. When the corn had been exposed to the weather and frosts a short time the husks would to a great extent, cleave from the ears leaving them almost naked. A man could then husk out the corn on the hill, at least fifty per cent faster than from the shock. After the corn was husked and drawn from the field the cattle were turned in and allowed to pick up the ears, overlooked, and eat such portions of the stalks and husks as they cared for. The great objection to this method was, that it required about twice as long to top an acre of corn as to cut it up near the ground. In the one they were obliged to cut each stalk separately, in the other they could cut up a hill at a single blow.

As it is now the established custom to cut up the corn below the ears, it is proper to inquire, how can it be managed so as to secure the stalks in the best condition? We would answer:

First—Cut up the corn just as early as it will do, before the corn has completely hardened, when a large portion of the ears are fairly glazed. In this condition the stalks contain their maximum of nutriment and they are saved from exposure to early frosts.

Secondly—Take great pains to stand up the corn that it will not be likely to fall down or blow over. Large shocks will stand better than small, but they should not be so large that they will not cure through. From thirty-five to fifty good hills will make a fair sized shock. After a shock is completed it should be well bound at top, not only to insure its standing up but also to turn the rain from the middle. Rather consume a few hours more in cutting, shocking and binding an acre of corn, than to do it so that a considerable portion of the shocks shall be overturned.

After the corn is cured enough to husk, have it husked and the stalks housed or stacked as soon as possible. Do not postpone husking until potatoes and apples are harvested because the corn will be less damaged by freezing than the other crops, but, if possible, hire the corn husked while the other work is going on. After the farmer has been to the expense of growing a crop it will not do to run the risk of having its value impaired to save hiring a little more labor, provided it can be done to advantage.

Do not wait until the corn is all husked before drawing any of the stalks, but keep them drawn pretty well up with the huskers. At the very best the stalks will be considerably weather-beaten and injured, but avoid all the injury possible. The summer harvests are being much damaged by frequent and prolonged rains, let everything possible be done to secure the autumn harvests in good condition.

Copp's Settler's Guide.

Henry N. Copp, the Land Lawyer of Washington, D. C., sends the ninth edition of COPP'S SETTLER'S GUIDE, an indespensable book to all who are interested in public land. A chapter, illustrated with numerous cuts, shows how to tell Township, Section and Quarter-Section Corners, and explains the system of Government Surveys. It gives the latest rulings and instructions under the Homestead, Pre-emption, Timber culture, Desert Land, and other laws. The price of the book is only 25 cents. It will tell you who is entitled to enter land; how continuous your residence must be; what improvements you must make; what affidavits you must swear to; all about contests, and on what grounds they can be commenced; also about State Lands, Stone and Timber Lands, Mineral Lands, Desert Entries, Saline, Railroad, Coal, Townsite, and other lands; Scrip, Warrant, and other entries. Its purchase will save money and trouble, as erroneous statements circulated by conversation among settlers may, if acted on, cost you a contest, perhaps your land and improvements.

Jacob Seligman ("Little Jake") has completed the purchase of 6,000 acres of pine land in the upper peninsula, but the terms could not be learned. He is at present engaged in making the purchase of a large tract of land on the Muskegon. Jacob Seligman is another of these lower peninsula "fellers," of whom the Marquette Mining Journal says there are a goodly number looking after pine lands in the upper peninsula.—Bay City Tribune.

YPSILANTI MINERAL WATERS.

Ypsilanti, Aug. 26, 1885.

Michigan is destined to world-renowned statesmen, authors, poets, gold, silver, copper, iron, salt, ozone and hundreds more valuable elements have assisted in the coronation, but it remained for Ypsilanti, with her Fountain of Healing waters to place the brightest star in the diadem. It goes without saying that mineral water contains one tenth curative and nine tenths imaginative powers. But with the mineral water here the rule is reversed. The assertion is safe that nine-tenths are curative powers, which combined with the one tenth of imagination does effect some wonderful cures. Some idea may be gained of the mineral properties when I tell you that no baths are given with more than two thirds of the strength of the water, the full power being utterly exhausting to the system, effecting the skin unpleasantly. There is no water known in the world that possesses such minerals strenth as does this rival of Ponce De Leon's fountain of youth. Hundreds are flocking here from all points of the compass. Boston, New York, New Orleans, Chicago, Joliet, Buffalo, are represented; in fact nearly every state in the union sends almost daily residents to this Mecca of Good Health. And yet human incredulity is after all the most obstinate disease to master. Living in the heart of this city within the sound of the great engine that serves teller to cancel the mortgages on human lives, is a young lady whose speech has been paralyzed for six months or more. But the one tenth faith is lacking so she drives by the gate that many come hundreds of miles to enter, or to the great dispensary of Medical skill situated in the famous city ten miles below. Strange as it may seem, an eminent physician of that same city brought here under personal supervision, a patient afflicted with paralysis to a degree that the limbs and feet were utterly incapacitated, and after thorough investigation of the mode of treatment, surrendered the patient to the Superintendent's care. This is the fourth week and the "General" is beginning to use crutches. His recovery judging from benefit thus far derived, is but a question of time, while miraculous is a mild term for what has already been accomplished for him. One thing patrons of this institution must bear in mind. It is folly to peddle owls in Athens. The superintendent, has made mineral baths a constant study for ten years, which, combined with the experience of a personal cure of sciataca in its worst form enables him to perscribe more successfully than the most confident novice. As the inexperienced will be interested a brief synopsis of the bath will not be obtrusive. The water is turned on for the first bath in equal parts, of the mineral and fresh water after which steam is let on until the temperature reaches 98 degrees. The patient now enters the bath, and the attendant commences manipulating the body. Steam is added at intervals, the manipulation continues and by the time a temperature of one hundred and eight is reached circulation is thoroughly aroused. Patients afflicted with paralysis or sciatica have taken baths as high 118°, the ordinary temperature used is not to exceed 110° which appropos is tolerably good cooking for the human flesh. At the expiration of ten minutes the patient emerges, undergoes a thorough rubbing with dry towels, is then wrapped in a dry sheet and put to bed enveloped in soft rose blankets. If any part of the body is affected with inflamation, cancer, tumor, paralysis or any thing of that nature hot compresses are applied for half an hour to the affected parts. By this time the body will prespire freely. The attendant again dries with towels and then comes the "spatting"; memories of nursery days come trooping down the halls as the spats fly thick and fast, but the sequence is far happier than in those times of infantile tribulations for the surface is all aglow with the warmth of rustication, while the patient dons his apparel and comes back to the plane of life with renewed vigor and stimulated with the brightest of hopes. Each day the bath is increased in strength until two thirds of the power of the water is used, which is the limit. In connection with the baths, the patient uses a wine glass of the mineral water, hot, as a beverage. Ladies suffer any amount of inconvenience in taking baths. The steam annihilates frizzes, the gases corrode jewelry while the saddest result of all is when they wash their pearly faces—Presto! Mineral water and cosmetics can not be made to harmonize. That the majority of the gentle sex do indulge in improving nature's defects is conceded without controversy. That nature revolts at the innovation, a douche of mineral water will attest. Black? You would think so! and such a wretched black, well, descriptive powers stagger and reel, that's all. Yes, even money, the Moloch of the American people, is subdued. Silver and gold turn black in the purse, without even having been exposed to the air of the bath room. It is a nice place in a bath room to create antique coins. Your correspondent has been the proud possessor of an old English coin issued under Geo. 1. It has always lacked the desired shade of antiquity. But the mineral water has applied times finger marks sans ceremonie. One word in conclusion. This water effects miraculous cures. The baths are given superior to those of any institution in this or any other state and should always be taken with an attendant and under the superintendents personal instruction. The well needs a nice commodious hotel in connection with the bath-house and other attractions that first class watering places afford to guests. These things the proprietors will bring in their own good time. In the mean time people can find private accommodations, and ought not to delay in seeking the restoration of health at this wonderful Fountain of Healing Waters.

FRED'K B. WOOD, Recorder.

The go-as-you-please marriage system, that has done so much to injure the sancity of marriage in Michigan has become a reproach upon the state, the legislature should endeavor to remove. The clandestine weddings, the elopement of minors will be brought to a close and many a deluded and misguided young girl, who marries without the knowledge and consent of her parents, will be saved from a life of degredation and misery. Other states throw these safe guards around the young and unsuspecting, why not ours? This act would result in incalculable good to society. It would prevent many disputed marriages in Michigan. It will be the faithful guardian of our homes alike, before and after marriages; it will cut off one half or more of the divorce cases. When it is once known that the man who inveigles a minor into having a private marriage ceremony performed will serve one to five years in prison for so doing, the number of these ill-advised marriages will be very few.—Bronson Independent.

Considerable complaint is being made by people whose water melon patches have suffered from what the boys call "cooning." It may be considered fun by the boys, but is rather a mean way to get melons and people who raise the fruit do not relish being the victims of such sport.

B. McHugh, of the M. & O. states that the August business of that road has been the heaviest they ever had. The Adrian Record reminds farmers of the coming county fair in this wise:

The managers of the Lenawee county agricultural fair association are doing all in their power to make the fair this year the most successful ever held in this county. All that is needed to this end is a little more united effort on the part of the farmers. The prospects are certainly very flattering, both for a better fair and a larger attendance than ever before. Crops of all kinds are good this year, and now is the time for farmers to sort out and lay aside the finest specimens of his productions for exhibition at the fair. Let every farmer bring something. No farmer can attend a successful county fair with his eyes opened without being benefitted.

The recent rains have put the ground in good condition for working and Lenawee county farmers are taking advantage of this fact to prepare for the fall seeding. The cool weather during the past few weeks has also kept the pasturage in splendid condition, and instead of being scorched and dried by the hot sun, as has been the case during the past several years, the grass is green, affording splendid pasturage for stock. At this time last season farmers in this vicinity had commenced feeding their stock but the expense is saved them this season and stock will go into winter quarters in prime condition.

Raisin Pioneer Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the Pioneers of Raisin township at the Presbyterian church, on Thursday, Oct. 1st. at 10 o'clock A. M. A general invitation is extended to the citizens of the township to turn out and help celebrate Old Folks' Day. Pioneers from adjoining towns are invited to be present. A picnic dinner will be served by the ladies at 12 o'clock. Those having in their possession relics of pioneer days, are requested to bring them along; an exhibition of such things will be one of the attractions of the day. BY ORDER OF COM.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT., 10, 1885.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

School began last Monday.

W. F. King of Adrian was in town Friday.

Adrian wants the next State Fair held there.

The lover of oysters fondly remembers that this is a month of R.

Hob Bird is driving Slayton's team during the absence of A. Vedder.

A. W. Slayton, wife and daughter, were in Detroit a few days last week.

Mrs. Wm. Richard of Lima, N. Y., is spending a few days with Miss Betsy Thompson.

We hear from old "York State" that apples and other fruit are in great abundance there.

Satterthwaite Bros. & Boyd have something to say this week about their new stoves.

Monday of last week the children of Britton began receiving their education in the new school building.

One and one-third rates on all the roads will buy a round-trip ticket to Adrian during the county fair this fall.

Last Sunday John Gillespie was made the father of a bouncing boy, and to say that he is happy does not half express it.

Last Saturday Charles Avery's machine threshed 1068 bushels of wheat in ten hours on the farm of John Fisher. A good day's work.

Buckwheat cakes are said to have been greatly injured by the recent frost. Many fields were badly cut and others escaped by a mere scratch.

Hub Stout and Henry Heesen are attending the Iowa State Fair, at DesMoines this week exhibiting Brewer's Brick and Tile Machines.

The following frank and sensible confession is from the Saline Observer: "This paper is too poor to puff any individual who is to poor to take and pay for it."

A Vedder is taking a rest, after two years hard work for Slayton & Son, and is now visiting friends at Hudson, Dover, etc. He takes his wife with him and we wish him lots of fun.

The village schools opened Monday with a large attendance, more so than usual at the beginning of the fall term. With the corps of teaches engaged we see no reason why Tecumseh cannot add to its already wide reputation for good schools.

The skating rink will be open Saturday afternoon and evening in the future, beside Wednesday evening. A race is being talked of between the fast skaters of the village, and Manager Cash proposes to give a prize to the champion.

A young lady's life was most miraculously saved recently by a friendly corset steel which warded off the bullet fired by her jealous lover, straight for her heart. What stronger argument than this do the girls want in favor of corsets?

S. C. Stacy has been confined to the house since last Friday with an attack of hay fever, cold and intermittant fever. He is now on the mend, however, and will soon be out again. He has had too many excursions and too much hard work lately.

After Sept. 15 tickets will be sold over the Lake Shore, in connection with the Michigan Central, Flint and Pere Marquette, Grand Rapids and Indiana, and Chicago and Northwestern, to hunting parties of three or more, at a little over one fare for the round trip. Guns, dogs, and 200 pound of baggage and camp equippage to each passenger will be carried free.

The Michigan State Department is anxious to have all dealers forward to Lansing on the first of each month a report of the quantity of wheat purchased by them, so that it can form an accurate estimate of the wheat remaining in farmers' hands for the monthly report. The Department pays all postage, supplies blanks and furnishes reports to all who comply with the request.

The M. & O. Railroad experienced another accident at Dundee yesterday afternoon. A Toledo & Ann Arbor freight train had run on to a side track at that place and left the switch open, and the M. & O. freight train that passes Tecumseh in the afternoon ran into the switch and struck the rear end of the train, smashing the caboose and damaging the engine considerably. The 7:16 passenger train last night on that road was three hours late in consequence.

The agricultural society extend a cordial invitation to all persons having tents, either small or large, to bring them and set them up during the fair on the grounds. It will make shade and shelter for the families owning them and add an attraction to the grounds. A good police force will be on the grounds night and day to protect all property. Only favorable weather is required to make the coming fair the most attractive ever held in Lenawee county. Entries are already coming in, and adjoining counties are asking the privilege of competing. Let everybody come and bring a tent if he has it.

M. GRAVES, Sec'y.

Joe Emery, of Adrian, was in town last Friday.

Burt Waring is clerking for Sutton, Fairfield & Co.

G. C. Spencer, the photographer formerly of this village is now located at Evansville Ind., where he has a lucrative position in a gallery there.

The following are the officers of the school board for 1885-6.

A. W. Mills, Moderator.
L. G. North, Director.
O. P. Bills, Assessor.

Beer's Post, G. A. R. now indulge in the luxury of hot coffee and doughnuts at their meetings, and there is a large increase in the attendance in consequence.

Landlord De Lano has placed a railroad headlight in front of the Lilley House, and the weary traveler now has plenty of light by which to seek that haven of rest.

G. P. Sparks has another snake, to keep company with the one caught two weeks ago. It was brought in by Jno. Wilber, and is the same species and about the same size as the other.

The Dundee Reporter says that local owners of fast horses speed their animals in the streets of the village, but they have not yet violated the ordinance which prohibits faster driving than six miles per hour.

Reading Telephone: Of over one hundred telephones in use in Coldwater last season only forty-three now remain. Forty-eight dollars per year is a high price, that but few wealthy men can stand. When the price is relegated down to about $20 or $25 per year telephones will come into more general use. It is now one of the greatest monopolies in the country.

An excursion to Cleveland, Ohio, Monday, Sept. 14th, is given on the M. & O. railway from Battle Creek. The route is to Toledo by rail thence through the beautiful islands of lake Erie to Cleveland, one of the most rapidly growing and beautiful cities in the United States. Euclid avenue and Prospect street are considered the finest avenues in the western states. Excursionists will be given an opportunity to see Garfield's monument, Commodore Perry's tomb and other places of interest in the city.

In the Tecumseh News report of last week regarding the encampment held at Devil's lake, a statement something like this was made, that Beer's Post No. 140, of Tecumseh was not represented or seen. This Post established its headquarters there on Wednesday of that week, and on Thursday morning had the honor of escorting the Governor of our state from the cars to the camping grounds. It was noticed by some as the first Post to fall in and present itself for the Reviews, and as they marched from headquarters it was quite noticeable that Albert Hyde and Rev. Getchell brought up the rear. How could you have overlooked it neighbor?

The printing press has made Presidents, killed poets, furnished bustles for beauties, and furnished genius with the sandpaper of criticism. It has made worlds get up to roll-call every morning; given the pulpit lungs of iron and voice of steam. It has set the price of a bushel of wheat, and made the country postoffice the glimmering goal of the rural scribe. It has curtailed the power of kings, embellished the pantry shelves and busted rings; it has converted bankers into paupers, made sawyers of college presidents; it has educated the homeless, and robbed the philosopher of his reason. It smiles and kicks, cries and dies, but it can't be run to suit everybody, and the editor is a fool who tries it.—Exchange.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

Orrin Pierce has already shipped over a hundred barrels of apples from Hudson this season.

The Morenci fair ground booths will be offered for rent for the fair on Saturday, September 19th.

Blissfield claims twenty-three of the 352 teachers who were authorized by the county board to teach last year.

Sheep killing dogs killed two and wounded nineteen sheep of the flock of John Johnson, of Medina, last week.

At a recent Methodist Episcopal quarterly meeting at Fairfield it was decided to sell the Methodist church at East Seneca.

Morenci has a Ladies' Relief society, which amounts to something. It gives entertainments and uses the proceeds in the relief of the suffering and needy.

Brace Brown, of Blissfield, purchased $130 worth of chickens, in the shape of three Buff Cochins, last week. He will go into the fancy poultry business.

The copartnership in the Deerfield roller flouring mills has been changed, Mr. Geo. Cannon, one of the firm, having disposed of his half interest to George Sisson. Benjamin Cannon, formerly supervisor of Deerfield for a number of years, remains the senior member of the new firm.

The following teachers' examinations will be conducted by the county board of examiners during the ensuing fiscal year: Sept. 26, Adrian; Oct. 17, Adrian; Oct. 30, Adrian; March 13, Tecumseh; March 26, Adrian; April 10, Blissfield; April 24, Hudson; May 1, Morenci; August 14, Adrian.

Saline Observer.—Addison Berdan was arrested by Marshal Gillan last Thursday night, and lodged in the jail at Ann Arbor until Monday when he had a trial before Justice Webb. Prosecuting Attorney Norris prosecuted, and Addison received a sentence of six months to the house of correction at Detroit. Sentence suspended during good behavior.

Adrian Times.—"This 'bates' all, an' we're much obleeged," jokingly spoke the editor as Thomas Bates deposited a bag full of cucumbers, tomatoes and and green corn in the sanctom of the Hudson Gazette. "And it still 'bates' all" groaned the editor the next day, as he read the proofs with the sheet between his feet, while cholera morbus wrung his—well, his soul.

The Morenci Observer knows of a picnic orator near Hudson who opened up the other day thus: "The emotions of sublimity engendered by the magnificence of this frondescent grove and lacustral landscape are inexpressible and incommunicable by virtue of the poverty of human language to portray them. * * We are intrinsically exhilarated that it is our exhalted prerogative to address you on this occasion, etc."

Clinton Local.—Friday morning Dr. J. C. Burroughs was kicked on the hip by a horse, and quite seriously injured. The doctor carries a flemm, for bleeding horses, in his pocket, the back of which projects about two inches. In kicking, the horse's foot struck the flemm, burying the blade in the flesh. The wound bled profusely for some time, rendering the doctor extremely weak from the loss of blood. He is so as to be about, by the use of a cane.

Hudson Post.—A few nights ago a prominant Hudson man was awakened by his wife, who told him there was a man down stairs. Trembling with fright he staggered from the bed and in his terror grabbed a length of stovepipe which he had in the room, and hurled it down stairs. Then with a yell he tumbled into bed, and pulling the clothes over his head waited for daylight to appear. The next day his wife related how bravely her husband had repulsed half a dozen burglars.

Adrian Record.—A green looking country kid, about ten years old, appeared in Blissfield the other morning leading a cow. A corner loafer to annoy the lad and frighten the cow, began bawling in imitation of a calf, at which the cow began to hang back, giving the boy considerable trouble. "Let the cow alone," said a bystander to the loafer. The boy was not so green as he looked, and called back over his shoulder as he tugged away at the rope, "Let him bawl, he's her calf; that's why the cow hangs back." The loafer was utterly discomfitted, the crowd roared, and the 10 year old urchin continued his triumpha march.

Hudson Post.—During the G. A. R. Encampment at Devils Lake a man named Frank J. Lewis, hailing from Michigan Center, Jackson county, obtained the right to sell pop and other light drinks on the grounds. He had a colored man with him as assistant. At the close of the encampment Under Sheriff Bowen arrested both on the charge of selling a liquid called 'The Wine of Life,' which it is alleged, proved as intoxicating as any kind of liquor. The prisoners were given in charge of Deputies Alchin and John Crandall. While waiting for a train to convey them to Adrian the colored man got away. Lewis was jailed. The complainant is John Brazee, of the hotel at the grounds.

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING.

The annual school meeting at the Cen ral school building last Monday evening was largely attended. The rumor that an effort was to be made to raise a large sum for a new building in the western part of the town, probably stimulating some to attend who usually stay at home.

The Moderator, Mr. David McNair, called the meeting to order and called for the minutes of the last annual meeting, which were read by the Director, Dr. L. G. North. The minutes being found correct, the Annual Report was read by the same officer, giving statements of all the receipts and expenditures in detail and containing estimates and recommendations for the ensuing year. The list of expenditures in detail is too long for us to present in full. One item deserves special mention, viz: the repairs on the furnaces. During the year there was paid for that purpose $293.33. Of this sum a part properly belonged to the year 1884 but could not be then reported as the work was not completed at the time of the annual meeting. Deducting $84.36 the amount that belonged to 1884, we still have $208.97 as the annual expense of the present heating arrangement. But one conclusion is possible, and that is, that the hot air furnaces should be done away with, and steam heating apparatus used in the Central and east branch buildings in the very near future. The Board would have asked for an appropriation for that purpose now, had not the needs for a new building in the west branch been imperative.

The report and its recommendations were adopted without a dissenting voice. The Moderator then appointed Mr. C. F. Field and Mr. L. P. Tribou as tellers.

First an informal and then a formal ballot was taken to elect a trustee as successor to David McNair, whose term of office then expired. On the formal ballot Mr. McNair received 49 of the 72 votes cast and was therefore declared elected trustee for the ensuing three years. After an informal ballot for a trustee to succeed Dr. S. Catlin, a formal ballot was taken when Dr. R. B. House received 46 votes of the 76 that were cast and was therefore declared elected trustee for the ensuing three years.

Mr. A. W. Mills then made an exhibition for the board of the portions of the town having the most primary scholars. From the census taken last week by Mr. A. Stevens, he showed that there are children of school age and under 10 years, in different parts of the town as follows:

In Brownsville, 26; between the Creek and Shawnee St., 17; south of Shawnee and east of L. S. R. R., 50; south of Shawnee and west of L. S. R. R., 101; total, 194.

From these facts he claimed that the district should at once provide better accommodations in the west branch which has but one small building with a single room. By referring to the above schedule it will be seen that there are 17 children south of the Creek and north of Shawnee St. Of these probably a full half go to the west branch school, making the number it has to accommodate about 110, i. e. it accommodates the children of a district whose census shows that number. The remainder of the town has 84 primary pupils and two rooms and two teachers to accommodate them, while this part has 110 with a single room and but a single teacher for their accommodations.

After Mr. Mills' exhibit, the matter was quite fully discussed and his views were concured in by all. There was some confusion of ideas before a definite plan of action was decided upon during which several motions and amendments were made and withdrawn. During the discussion Mr. J. S. Strong, a heavy and life long tax payer remarked, "I do not regret any money that I have ever paid for school purposes." This remark coming from such a source had a decided influence and the sentiment seemed to be adopted by all the tax payers present. Mr. Mills thought perhaps $2000 would build such a house as was needed. Some were in favor of raising the whole amount by tax this fall. After the confusion above referred to, Judge Stacy presented the following resolutions which were adopted one at a time, with the best of feeling among all concerned.

Resolved, That a suitable building be erected for a school building on the site of the West branch school house, such building to be erected on such suitable place thereon as may be fixed on by the School Board, and to be completed by the first day of the next school year, September, 1886.

Resolved, That the School Board be and they are hereby directed to have prepared suitable plans, specifications and estimates for such building, being of such a building as they believe to be suitable and proper for the same, and not less than necessary for the accommodations for two separate primary school rooms and report the same to an adjourned meeting of said School District, to be held at the Union School building on Monday, January 4th, at 7:30 o'clock P. M. for such action as may be taken by the District meeting in regard thereto.

Resolved, That one thousand dollars be appropriated toward paying the expenses of building said school house and that it be raised by tax on the district this year.

The meeting then adjourned to Jan. 4, 1886. The spirit which actuated the tax payers at this meeting is what makes Tecumseh such a desirable place of residence and what gives the schools the prestage they now enjoy. It would be a good thing for the future generations of Tecumseh if all her tax payers could or would adopt as their own Mr. Strong's noble sentiment, "I do not regret any money I have ever paid for school purposes."

A TERRIBLE CYCLONE.

The storm of last Tuesday did not do any damage in Tecumseh, but the farmers south of here experienced a terrible cyclone, which done thousands of dollars damage to buildings and fruit. When first seen it appeared funnel shaped and looked like black smoke, and when a mile west of Jas. Colvin's farm it broke in all its fury. Geo. Hanford's barn was unroofed and trees blown down on his farm. Mr. Colvin's barn was unroofed, bending some of the heavy rafters like sticks, and tearing the floor up. His wind-mill was blown down and the wheel broke in pieces, and a high board fence around his yard was flattened. The trees in his orchard were almost ruined, but his house was not touched. Jas. Cairns' barn was also unroofed and trees blown down, as was John Hanley's barn.

Mr. Fulton McLain says he was over in a field on his farm when he saw the storm coming and started for the house with it thundering after him. He escaped from any harm but looked back saw large trees torn up by the roots, and the air full of flying fence rails and branches. A large drag was lifted fifty feet in the air and carried into another field, and not a fence was left standing on his farm. The storm struck the farms of Geo. Hollister and Alex. Orr, tearing down fences and flattening the corn, and taking the roof off of Mr. Orr's barn. The school house in Raisin, near Comfort's brick yard, was damaged considerably and fences blown down.

AT RIDGEWAY AND BRITTON.

The storm struck the village of Ridgeway about 5:30 o'clock, at the M. & O. depot, and tore the roof off from the West end of it, carrying and scattering it for rods, also tearing down and uprooting fruit and shade trees for E. C. VanVleet, taking with it a part of the roof and chimney from the Northeast corner of the church landing it in a pile near the study at the West end. As it crossed the street it tore down the chimney on Mrs. M. A. Barrett's house, and completely crushed Jacob Arner's barn. It unroofed Dr. D. W. Loree's barn, laying level to the ground Harvey Smith's summer kitchen. As it struck Mr. Gunn's house it carried the north part of the roof out in the street, taking bedding and clothing from 20 to 30 rods away. Mr. R. McWilliams who was coming to the village with a horse and buggy was blown with horse and buggy in the ditch near Mr. Gunn's place. The horse was not hurt but the buggy was broken and Mr. McWilliams had several ribs broken. A mile north of Britton it took the roof fron T. Hoagland's barn and smashed up a new sheep barn 30x40 feet for Mrs. David Ousterhout, then took Geo. Cheever's new house and carried it clear from the foundation dumping it in a pile 15 feet away. Geo. Cheever had a cow and calf picked up and thrown with such violence as to kill them instantly. As it struck Geo. Smith's farm it tore some buildings entirely to pieces, moving a barn 32x48 from its foundation and taking the roof entirely off. John Curry and John Kemp were carried several rods and landed under the fence, but did not receive serious injuries. It blew down Ransom Mills' barn, killing one cow and hurting another seriously.

BILIOUSNESS.
Bilious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, yellow eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. Act upon the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.

THE FAMOUS PONY EXPRESS.

Where It Went, How It Went, and What It Accomplished.

Twenty years ago settlers starting for the far West, with their heavily laden wagons, knew that the journey would occupy six months of hard travel, and might involve many dangers of varied character, chiefly from hostile Indians, [illegible] and rattlesnakes. Once started on that far journey, many a weary month must elapse ere any tidings could reach them from the home they had left.

Great was the excitement, when a company of [illegible] determined men undertook their dangerous ride to carry dispatches in the shortest time across the Atlantic to the shores of the Pacific in fourteen days. The feat was declared impossible. Nevertheless, the Central Overland California and Pikes Peak Express was thus organized, the vast expanse of country right across the Great Continent was divided into runs of sixty miles, and at each terminus eight hours were allowed as stations and stables for men and horses.

The riders were strong, swift ponies, selected for their hardiness and great powers of endurance, and the riders were picked men—experienced scouts and trappers, and even in that region of keen, fearless riding men—for courage and good horsemanship and many a time most both have been tried in the runs in the course of those terribly long and lonely lonesome rides across the [illegible] prairie, continually in danger of attack, by day or by night, by wild Indians or highway robbers.

[illegible] express messenger started from each side of the Great Continent. From the first moment to the last no time must be lost. As long as the good and fleet gallop [illegible] and the eager hoofs seemed as tireless as their riders, and scarcely needed the cruel spur to urge them on. For [illegible] miles at a stretch they [illegible] at their utmost speed and when at length the goal was reached, where the next messenger was waiting in the saddle, ready to start without an minute's delay, the precious [illegible] was transferred from one postman to the other, and, ere the wearied incomer had even dismounted, his successor had started on his onward way.

Then pony and man might rest and feed and wait again till the return of the messenger with a modified letter bag, which was warranted to accomplish its journey toward or from the [illegible] miles in 240 hours. The railway on the New York side being already constructed as far as St. Joseph, that station was the eastern point to which the Pony Express had to run.

This Pony Express was continued for two years, accomplishing its work with amazing regularity, and involving many a feat of splendid riding and wild adventure. It proved however, a ruinous failure from a pecuniary point of view, and the company collapsed with a debt of [illegible]—Family Magazine.

PEAT.

How It Is Gathered for Fuel in Peat Bearing Countries.

The [illegible] of the peat harvest in many parts of Ireland and Scotland is a matter of much importance to the inhabitants, and one [illegible] seriously interfering with the necessary operations. The cutting commences early in the season as soon as the water and spring [illegible] have drained from off the surface. In Ireland a long narrow slip measuring from three to six feet across is cleared to the depth of a foot or so of the [illegible] spongy peat and heather which lies on the surface. Extending from this certain space of surface, called in some districts a swarth, is marked out for peat for the required [illegible] of peat which as they are cut are laid close upon it to dry. The peat cut early, as it is [illegible] called in that country, is cut in a narrow rectangular block, about one foot to eighteen inches in length. The implement used in cutting, called a slane, somewhat resembles a spade, with a flat piece of steel attached to the bottom at the right angle, and turned up at right angles. The blocks are cut from the mass with a downward thrust of the implement, the arms alone being used, without the assistance of the foot, as in an ordinary spade. After the blocks have lain for some time, and the sides and upper surfaces have dried somewhat, they are turned and then placed on end in small stacks, which are piled together in larger heaps and the drying process has advanced. The work of cutting, turning, and stacking the peat is not such an unpleasant occupation as might be supposed. It is cleanly work enough. There is no need to handle the peat in a wet state, though even then it does not stain or stick to the hand or person, and has no unpleasant smell. When it has dried somewhat it is light, clean, and easy to handle. It is unusual to cut the peat down to the level of the pool beneath, the produce of the lower layers, although most valuable as fuel, drying into hard and brittle fragments, which do not bear handling or removal. When the upper matter becomes exhausted the remainder is sometimes dug out, mixed with water, and kneaded with the hands and feet. It is then cut into square blocks, and dried in the ordinary way. The peat bogs of Ireland ought to be a source of considerable profit to that country, and but for the low heating power of peat, which renders it unfit for use as fuel for manufacturing purposes, they would have, no doubt, long ago led to the development in that country of industrial and manufacturing activity similar on a small scale to that produced by coal in England. To remedy this defect in peat as a fuel various processes have been tried for compressing it, so as to get rid of the large percentage of water always present in the best dried samples. These experiments have not, up to the present, met with any great success when tried on a large scale. Well-dried peat contains as much as twenty per cent of water, and even when most of it is expelled, unless the peat is rendered compact and waterproof by some process, its spongy texture causes it to reabsorb a large proportion of moisture from the atmosphere.—N. Y. Times.

LONDON SEWAGE.

What It Is Estimated to Be Worth, and Plans for Its Disposal Considered.

It has been computed that the annual value of London sewage amounts to 8s. 3d per individual, and, estimating the population at 4,000,000 persons, the total value would be more than $8,000,000 per annum. It would thus appear, on the face of it, that in some way or other this sum should be saved for the city. There are two ways of deriving profit from sewage. One is by the application of sewage to land, as, for instance, is done at Pullman, Ill., or from treatment by chemical processes. Precedents for the first plan exist in Great Britain, the more notable ones being in Edinburgh and Doncaster, but from neither of these could the commissioners derive sufficient encouragement to infer that the pumping and other expenses would not cancel all of the possible profits. The second plan is regarded as yet more unfavorably, for the available material value of the sewage is at present too small to admit of obtaining from it any product which can be sold at anything like the cost of its production."

With reference to the plans for the treatment of the metropolitan sewage, four possible schemes are presented and analyzed. These are broad irrigation, filtration through land, processes of deposition or precipitation, and precipitation supplemented by application to land. The testimony seems to be quite decisive and uniform that for every 100 persons one acre would be needed in broad irrigation, and that the sewage should be strained or purified before permitted to finally pass upon the surface of the land. When it is remembered that 10000 acres are equal to about sixty-two square miles, the impracticability of this scheme is apparent for no such farming area can be found in the neighborhood of London.

The method which meets with the greatest favor from the commission is the last one mentioned. The chief advantage is that the sewage is thereby much more thoroughly deprived of its noxious qualities. The process is found in actual use in Birmingham, and is described as follows: "The sewage is treated with lime and allowed to deposit in a series of large tanks. The clarified liquid is then passed through porous land, after which it flows into the river, being found perfectly innocuous. The sludge deposit, which amounts to 400 tons a day, is allowed to raft in its semi-fluid state upon a portion of the land laid out to receive it, after which it is dug into the ground, which is covered with soil, planted, cropped, and used for filtration. One acre per week is allotted for this purpose, and the land so used remains for three years before sludge is put upon it again. Thus the quantity of land required for the disposal of the sludge would be 156 acres." Such a system meets the ch of difficulties. It does not require the large area demanded for broad irrigation, and it clarifies the filth which is now polluting the Thames, even up to the bridge. The history of London's sewerage experiment conclusively shows that a city has not solved the problem when it has even devised a method for drawing off its drainage. The farm must be considered, as well as the lines of transportation.—Lippincott's Magazine.

ALL IN THE TREATMENT.

Large Varieties of Plants the Result of Judicious Manuring and Proper Culture.

Every year many persons pay large prices or are at great pains to secure varieties of currants, asparagus and rhubarb, or pie-plant, which they see in nursery grounds or in the garden of their friends. Sometimes they see specimens in the hands of agents, and give orders for a supply for planting in their own grounds. Quite likely they have all these things growing, but they want better varieties of them. It does not occur to them, and of course the agent does not inform them that they now have the very kinds they are ordering, and that the difference between what they have and what they wish is entirely due to the judicious application of manure and proper culture. Such, however, is generally the case. By using a sufficient quantity of well-rotted stable manure, applied at the right time, and by giving the soil the working it requires, the stalks of asparagus and pie-plant may be made exceedingly large. These plants are very gross feeders, as might be expected when we take into consideration the circumstance that a portion of their growth is cut away every two or three days during several months of the season. Most kinds of plants would be killed outright by this sort of treatment, and these will only thrive well by supplying them with material to reproduce the portions that have been removed.

The currant bush is as gross a feeder as the rhubarb or asparagus plant. It will retain its life, make some increase in size, and produce some fruit if it stands in poor soil, is surrounded by grass and weeds, and receives the benefit of no fertilizers. But its growth will be very small under these circumstances, and the fruit will be inferior in quality and very small in quantity. The common red Dutch currant is a very good variety and is distributed in all parts of the west. It was planted near old Fort Dearborn, which was located near the mouth of the Chicago River, and cuttings taken to various portions of the Western States. A supply of currant cuttings can be obtained in almost any neighborhood for nothing or for the trouble of pruning the bushes. Their increase into the dimensions of bearing bushes and their productiveness will depend almost entirely on the amount of manure that is applied to them. If some of the bushes are planted where the soil is very poor and the ground is allowed to grow up to grass and weeds, and others are placed where the soil is naturally rich, is kept well supplied with manure and free from weeds and grass, the difference will be so great between them in a few years that a stranger would conclude they belonged to distinct varieties.

Large stalks of asparagus and pie-plant sell much more readily than small ones, and customers generally think that their quality is better. Large currants are more salable than small ones, and the quality of currants is ordinarily determined by their size. The larger currants are the greater is the quantity of juice that can be expressed from a given amount. There are as many seeds in a very small currant as in a very large one. It is much easier to gather a bushel of currants if the clusters are long and the berries are large than if the reverse is the case. If currants are very large they are admirable to eat without being cooked. Only bushes that are in a good growing condition will produce large crops of fine fruit. Their growth will depend chiefly on the amount of manure that is applied to them. The early part of the fall is the best time to apply manure to currant bushes and to asparagus and rhubarb plant. Well-rotted stable manure is as good a fertilizer as can be found. If applied near the surface of the ground the soluble portions of it will be carried about the roots by the fall and spring rains. The application of manure in the fall will cause the bushes and plants to commence growing as soon as the frost has left the ground in the spring.—Chicago Times.

INCREASE OF MANKIND.

The Prospective Progress of the Working Classes During the Next Century.

The great English statistical writer, William Giffen produced a recent paper on "The Progress of the Working Classes," which he introduced with a brief general survey of a number of very valuable statistics concerning the comparative progress of different parts of the world, and especially of the different countries of Europe, during the last hundred years. The researches of a French statistician, M. Moreau de Jonnes, have made this possible; and from the carefully compiled tables of that writer Mr. Giffen is able to show such significant facts as these: That the population of Europe has increased in a hundred years from 145,000,000 to 350,000,000, or, if the people of European race settled out of Europe be added, to 420,000,000; that the English race has multiplied five-fold, the Russian fourfold, the German two-and-a-half-fold, and the other races of Europe in a smaller proportion. Italy having nearly doubled, and France and Spain having added only about fifty per cent. to their population in a hundred years. The actual effects of these varying rates of increase upon political power are obvious; and still more obvious is their prospective effect. Circumstances may modify the result to a certain extent, but on the whole there is not much reason to doubt, as Mr. Giffen puts it, that "in another century there will be nearly 800,000,000 of the British race (with the German blend) in the world; while the Russian race, apart from conquest, will not exceed 800,000,000, and the others, increasing more slowly still, will lag far behind." France a century hence will probably number about 42,000,000 against 36,500,000 now, and Spain 22,000,000 against 17,000,000 now, and Australia 30,000,000 to 3,000,000 now.—Chicago Tribune.

—Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes is of the opinion that "bad air, bad whisky and irregular habits keep the doctors alive."

STAMP PAPER.

How It Is Made Under the Eye of Federal Agents.

The work of manufacturing 450,000 pounds of paper for internal revenue stamps for one year, in accordance with the contract just obtained from the Government, is in progress at the paper mill of Alexander Balfour, at Richmond and Tioga streets. This is the first time that such work has been attempted in this city, and every effort has been made to give satisfaction. After the mill had been in operation for a short time it was found that the paper was being rolled off in a satisfactory manner and the work of preparing it for shipment began. The paper used does not differ in quality from ordinary line paper. It is made from rag pulp, chiefly of cotton stock, with a sufficient portion of fine manila stock to give proper strength, clay or any other adulterations being excluded. Entire freedom from thread knots grit or other foreign substances is required, and the paper is calendered sufficiently to admit of wetting down for plate printing and of subsequently writing freely upon it with pen and ink. With all these conditions it is required that the paper shall possess no greater strength than will insure its printing and necessary handling. The quality of the paper is, therefore, necessarily of a high order. That which, apart from the familiar light-green tint of revenue stamps, distinguishes this paper from all other paper material is the letters U. S. I. R. water-marked upon it so thickly that every square inch must contain some portion of this sign. This marking is done by means of a "dandy roller," which is placed among the series of rollers through which the paper is passed on its road from the pulp tub to the receiving rollers. The paper passes over this roller while in a wet pulpy condition, and the impression of the letters is then made. This roller is furnished by the Government, and was sent on under charge of a watchman. It is never out of sight of some of the officials, and will be returned to Washington as soon as the contract is completed. The whole operation is under the supervision of the Government officials, who keep an eye on the paper from the time it receives its water-marking, which makes it revenue paper, until the perfected sheets are packed and shipped, and the waste pieces are returned to the pulp. No one is admitted except under their care. This precaution is taken to prevent the Government from being defrauded through engravers securing paper under which stamps of high denomination could be printed. To have even a small piece of this paper in one's possession will subject one to a criminal prosecution.

The paper is wound into rolls about four feet long and weighing 300 pounds. After being trimmed and cut by two cutting machines into sheets 12x14 inches it is handed over to the counters.

J. H. Lichliter, of the Internal Revenue Department, represents the Government, and has twenty-two ladies to act as examiners and counters, and six men employed as laborers and watchmen. These all receive $3 per day, bearing their expenses themselves. The ladies who were selected for this special work are from Washington and Baltimore, and are quartered under the charge of Mr. Lichliter, in private houses near the mill. The sheets are first counted by the employes of the mill, and are then passed to the examiners, who carefully inspect each sheet, rejecting all containing any blemish. The Government counters then count the sheets, arranging them in bundles of 1,000 sheets, each girl attaching a tag, with her name. On reaching Washington the paper will be again counted, and the counter held responsible for any error. The completed bundles are placed by the mill employes in shipping cases, holding about 400 pounds each, when the Government officials seal the cases and receipt for the paper. It is then out of the hands of the manufacturer, and the officials see to its safe shipment to Washington, where it will be printed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. A package of 1,000 sheets weighs about twelve pounds, and each counter will count and arrange fifteen packages daily.

Mr. Balfour has contracted to complete the order in two months. To manufacture the paper requires one machine or one-half the capacity of his mill, which turns out 10,000 pounds a day. The contract for this paper has been given to the Fairchild Paper Company, of Boston, for seven years past, but this year there was a tie in the bids of that firm and Mr. Balfour, at seven and one-fourth cents a pound. The contract was finally awarded to Mr. Balfour, because he agrees to finish the work in two months. The Massachusetts Company runs by water-power, and has taken as long as seven months to complete the contract, thus entailing a heavy additional expense for the pay of the counters and watchmen.—Philadelphia Cor. Chicago Herald.

—In "Brain Rest," Prof. J. L. Corning gives seven rules whereby mental bankruptcy may be avoided. Avoid, first, excessive indulgence of the emotions; second, frantic desultory efforts to accomplish in one hour an amount of mental work appropriate to double that amount of time; third, avoid every species of excess which experience has proven leads to general constitutional drain; fourth, avoid attempting to do two things at one and the same time; fifth, avoid petty social and other engagements which interfere with the function of sleep; sixth, avoid constipation, as experience has abundantly proven that this condition is productive of abnormal depression; seventh, avoid indigestible food.—Chicago Times.

—One of the latest arrivals at the Berks County (Pa.) Insane Asylum is a young man who has a number of half dollars, which he keeps in his mouth night and day. He says that is the only way he feels comfortable. Without the silver in his mouth he is in pain.—Pittsburgh Post.

The Voice of the People.

The people, as a whole, seldom make mistakes, and the unanimous voice of praise which comes from those who have used Hood's Sarsaparilla, fully justifies the claims of the proprietors of this great medicine. Indeed, these very claims are based entirely on what the people say Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for them. Read the abundant evidence of its curative powers, and give it a fair, honest trial.

He wanted to go north, and he "tried to make the thing point north, but it wasn't no use, 'twould shake, shake, shake round and point southeast every time.

The explosion of three stills in the Doan oil works at Cleveland, O., on the morning of the 7th set fire to the agitators in the yards of the Standard Oil Company, near by, causing a loss to the plant of from $30,000 to $40,000. The value of oil destroyed was about $5,000.

The one thousand miners employed in the Tuscarawas Valley (Ohio) district, who have been on a strike since August 1 against a reduction in the price of mining from seventy-five cents to sixty cents per ton, have effected a compromise with the operators and resumed work on the 7th at sixty-five cents per ton.

Heavy frosts on the night of the 5th damaged the corn crop in the vicinity of Hudson, Wis. At Berlin two-thirds of the cranberry crop was destroyed, entailing an estimated loss to growers of $20,000.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

The Montreal Board of Health has been notified that unless immediate steps are taken to stamp out the small-pox in that city a quarantine will be enforced by the State of New Hampshire, Vermont and Michigan, and by the Province of Ontario, against the Province of Quebec.

Lieutenant General John H. Melville Babington, of the British army, was killed recently while shooting grouse in the County of Dumfries, Scotland, by the accidental discharge of his gun.

A bitter spirit of hostility is manifested between the Germans and Czechs in Bohemia, and outbreaks are continually occurring. At a military camp at Pilsen a riot broke out a few days ago and many persons were injured.

There were forty-nine new cases of small-pox and twenty-nine deaths from the disease at Montreal on the 5th. At a citizens' meeting the same day resolutions were adopted urging the vigorous use of vaccination in the infected districts.

Official dispatches reached the Spanish Government from the Phillipines on the 5th stating that a German gunboat landed troops on the night of the 24th of August at Yap Island and hoisted the German flag there. The Spanish vessels San Quentin and Manila were at Yap Bay at the time. The Captains of the Spanish vessels and the Spanish Governor protested against the occupation. The news caused the wildest excitement throughout Spain. A mob gathered in front of the German Embassy at Madrid, attacked the building and tore down the coat of arms and dragged it through the streets to the Puerta del Sol, where they burned it in front of the offices of the Minister of the Interior amid yells of "Down with Germany." The mob was finally dispersed by the military. A similar disturbance also occurred at Valencia.

Returns from all the cholera infected districts of Spain on the 7th show a decided abatement of the disease. There were 2,417 new cases and 779 deaths.

LATER NEWS.

At Pine Village, Warren County, Ind., a few days ago, Harvey Osborne, while drunk, beat and kicked his little stepdaughter Mamie, seven years old, into insensibility, and then hurled her down a steep stairway, inflicting injuries from which she died next morning. The child's own mother, whom Osborne married a year ago, looked on with shocking indifference. The indignant neighbors tried to lynch the couple but they escaped.

General Schofield telegraphed the War Department from the scene of the disturbances in Wyoming on the 7th, that there was no report of further trouble since the arrival of troops, and none was likely to occur in their presence.

Thomas Hughes, postmaster at Albuquerque, New Mexico, and his assistant, Mr. Clark, have been arrested. A deficiency of $1,200 has been found. The records of the office are in a very bad condition.

The Byron Fairbanks pardoned by Governor Hill, of New York, a few days ago, is the same person in whose behalf Samuel Boone and his wife, sister of Fairbanks, assaulted Governor Cleveland in October last. The woman struck at the Governor in his chamber and Boone assaulted him on Eagle Street.

The annual parade of the labor organizations of New York took place on the 7th. Fully 15,000 men were in the ranks, representing every trade that could be named. The procession attracted much attention.

ASIA MINOR.

The Condition of the Working People of Asiatic Countries.

The condition of the working people in Asia Minor is not one of hardship or destitution. There are no public institutions in that country for the support of the poor or unfortunate, and no public schools. There are no workhouses, no asylums for the insane, the blind, the deaf and dumb, or the idiotic. There are hospitals in the larger places, and also schools, but they are wholly supported by private subscriptions. The result of this state of affairs is swarms of hideous mien upon the streets and thoroughfares, and universal illiteracy among the poorer classes of the laboring people. Consul Stevens says the highest wages paid in Asia Minor in the general trades are $6 per week to coopers and blacksmiths. Bakers get but $1.46 and millers but $2.93.

In Syria the condition of the laboring classes is neither satisfactory nor prosperous. Most of the native weavers of silk and cotton goods receive from twenty to forty cents per day, a sum which hardly suffices to secure for them the daily necessaries of life. Not over five per cent. are able to save anything from their wages, and in many cases weavers work for wages received in advance. The condition of agricultural laborers is not any better throughout the country. The wages paid for an adult plowman with a team of oxen are from forty to fifty cents per day. The plowman, as a rule, feeds himself and team. The average wages paid to spinners of both sexes is $1 per week.

Consul Merrill reports from Jerusalem that in Palestine, instead of a happy and prosperous people, one sees on every hand oppression and suffering, ignorance and degradation. Nearly all the Jews of Jerusalem receive charity, while two-thirds of them depend mainly upon those funds which come mostly from Europe for their support. Were this aid to be cut off suddenly, the Consul says, these people would perish from starvation.

Consul-General Benjamin writes from Persia:

"I know of no laboring classes in other countries who appear more cheerful and satisfied with their lot. The climate also in most parts of Persia is of such a nature as to reduce the actual wants of the people. One hears occasionally of riots or attacks on tax collectors guilty of more than ordinary rapacity, but I cannot learn that these are more frequent than formerly." Wages in all of the general trades are less than 90 cents a day, except an engraver, who gets $1.61, and a "handler of loaves at the oven," who gets $1.21. Most of the laborers in Persia endeavor to save money no matter what their wages may be.

Coolies in Ceylon were paid sixty cents a week, so Consul Morey reports. This class of help underbids the natives, who will earn in the general trades from sixty-eight cents to $4.50 per week, the latter sum being given to gas-fitters. The average weekly wages will amount to less than $2.

Wages in China are from $4.50 to $8 per month, and are paid to laborers following the general trades. Employes in shops and stores in cities receive from $3.50 to 4.50 per month. Men get twenty cents a day in the mines. Household wages are $1.50 per month. The cost of nourishment for the laboring and industrial classes of China is from $2 to 2.50 per month. "In fact," says Consul Seymour, of Canton, "the cost of living has been reduced to the minium standard, and all seem to be healthy and contented; and as for industry, every ounce of muscle in men, women and children above three years of age, is utilized until indolence is scarcely visible."

Consul Seymour says, further: "If the working people of the United States were compelled to subsist on the dirt and conform to the economies of Asia, which holds half the population of the globe, and realized the miserable scale or standard of human existence prevalent in these cheap-labor countries, between which and the well-regulated industry of the United States, the adoption of international agrarianism would establish an average, there would be less clamor in favor of a pernicious policy which contemplates competition between two systems of labor, with the certainty of leveling American labor to the point at which it is proposed to elevate the value of Asiatic labor, which is satisfied with from twenty to fifty cents per day and garbage for food.—Consular Reports to the State Department.

Rich Men in America.

An American visitor to one of our stately homes, especially on such June days as we have lately had, cannot but be charmed with what greets his eyes—the spacious mansion, the ample park, the shrubbery and gardens, all in exquisite array. "We have nothing to compare with this," says he with a sigh. Very true; but there is another side, and a serious one, to this charming picture. All these glories, together with the inevitable establishment which goes with them are constantly telling most of their owners: "If you have all this, you can not have that." The well-to-do American has no parks and pleasure grounds costing thousands a year to keep up, but then he is apt to have ready money galore. He goes to Fenton's in London, or the Bristol in Paris, has just what he feels inclined to have, does not stint his wife and daughters, and, in fact, experiences a perfect ease in regard to expenditure—such as, I fear, three parts in four of those who have ten men in the garden and five in the stables rarely experience with us.—London Land Agent's Record.

—Some of these Nevada men are sarcastic. Helena's Mayor, Mr. Sullivan, is a barber. The other day a former member of the Nevada Legislature (he is in the sheep business in Judith County, Montana) was at Helena. He went into Sullivan's shop and the Mayor shaved him. A short time afterward he was seen further down the street "looking" he said, "for an Alderman to black his boots." He was fired out of the Capital.—Butte (Montana) Inter-Mountain.

OBITUARY.

There was buried at Macon, Aug. 19, one who for a long time was familiarly known as Aunt Polly Britton. The afternoon of the burial was exceedingly beautiful. The gathered harvests and the slightly yellow tinged verdure of approaching autumn, gave a hallowed like sweetness to the solemnity of the occasion, and many friends gathered at the Baptist church to look for the last time on the face so long familiar to them, and to follow to her final resting place one who had lived among them since the earliest settlement of the country. She was born in the state of N.Y., March 28th, 1807. In 1827 while yet living there, she was married to Wm. Britton. In the fall of 1831 she with her husband moved to the Territory of Michigan, and settled on the Chicago turnpike, about three miles northeast of Saline. Leaving the turnpike in 1832, they settled on the county line between the townships of Saline and Macon, one mile north of the little village of Macon. There they lived many years, and there they cultivated those friendly associations so characteristic of early pioneer life.

About twenty five years ago Mrs. Britton united with the Freewill Baptist church. In early times the baptismal service was administered in the Macon just west of where the stream is crossed by the Saline and Tecumseh road. And here more than a quarter of a century ago she followed the example of Him who in the Jordan was baptised, and who said, "I am the resurection and the life," and she believed in him whose great Apostle said "Therefore we are buried with time by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." So she walked in the newness of life, ever faithful and loyal to the church. Two years and a half ago, while visiting friends in the northern part of the state, she was stricken with paralysis and was taken to the home of her daughter in Rollin, where she died, August 17th, 1885.

This is a happy world—who says to the contrary is a fool or something else. Here is every thing to make us happy, the land, the sea and sky contribute to our enjoyment. The man who has a good heart sees pleasure, when a bad person sees nothing but gloom. The secret then of being happy and enjoying the glorious world is to have a virtuous heart. Who is the most contented man in your neighborhood? Is the man who has the greatest riches? No, it is he that has the kindest heart, for nothing ruffles his temper or disturbs his repose. The morning sky, the evening dew, the rolling waters, the blooming landscape, the teeming forest and the flakes of snow; give him a pleasure that others never dream of. It is he whose mind is led from nature up to nature's God, and every day that he lives he is contened and happy as it is possible for man to be. Depend upon it, this world is a beautiful one, and contains a thousand sources of enjoyment which they can only see and feel whose hearts are pure and whose lives correspond with the word of eternal truth.—Ex.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Every preparation for having a good Fair was completed, except procuring an abstract of the weather to be furnished, and consequently the scheme was subjected to a wholesale drown. One day of cloud and one of sunshine at the last rewarded perseverance with about five hundred and fifty dollars of membership and gate money. The stock display was much larger and better than ever before; horses were plentiful and included some of the very best in the State: races better than the most sanguine expected, and on the whole a fair victory was gained over adverse circumstances. Prof. McQuin made two faultless balloon ascensions. There was so little breeze that the balloon shot skyward so high that its passenger looked the size of a wren. The first landing was in a field about two miles away; the second on the hard road bank of Brighton street. He came down swiftly and struck with such force as gave him a severe headache and deranged his ears for an hour or two. Everybody was glad when the feat was accomplished and many would have been willing to pay more for a sample of his cowardice than for his daring, and kept their nerves in tune. The storm reduced the number of exhibits in floral hall, but what there was, made creditable showing. Vegetables and fruits were few and nice. Two White Sewing machines and their operators comprized machinery and hardware. I trust they will pardon me if I class the gentlemen wrong. They were nice needle artists, and furnished their territory with elegant embroidery on all sorts of woolen frabrics, leather and wood. Mrs. Whitney and others of this place displayed a variety of art needlework-painting and wax flowers, and Campbell had nice specimens of Carving. A silk quilt wrought in curious devices and flowers, was a masterpiece of needle work, and possessed the additional merit of being the work of Mrs. J. White; a lady who has seen seventy-six summers. There were specimens of decorated china too, and I heard of, but failed to see a dress worn more than two hundred years ago. A fine collection of paintings came from Allegan, but though their merit was undeniable, no premium was awarded because their owner does not belong to this district. Mrs. Bush also contributed beautiful pictures. Mrs. Pratt of Norvell, brought boxes and designs in cut flowers that were pretty, but made no attempt to rival Mrs. Holden, who in addition to bouquet work brought the contents of her conservatory, which is much finer than is usually shown at county fairs. Among them was a glossy fan-palm, India-rubber tree, rare lilies in bloom, and a Cactus meddlesome people would be willing to let alone.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Mrs. Dr. Begel returned on Monday from Hanover, where she had been called by the death of her sister, Mrs. Ransdell. Only a few weeks ago she made the Doctor's people a visit, and although in poor health at the time, they little thought that in less than four weeks from the day she left for home she would be borne to her last resting place. The blow falls heavily upon the family as this is the fifth one out of a family of ten children who have died within a few years.

Quite a number of people from this vicinity are attending the Free Methodist conference now in session at Milan.

Some of the houses in Holloway are decorated with scarlet fever notices.

Sol. Munch is exceedingly happy over a flowing well which he had the good luck to strike while boring for water. The water rises several feet above the surface and flows a steady stream.

If we understand it right, this community has in the past enjoyed the reputation of respectfully observing the Sabbath. But of late certain individuals have manifested an unusual amount of depravity by taking their guns regularly every Sunday morning and going to the woods in close proximity to the church, where they manage to keep up a pretty steady racket for several hours. Now this may be according to some peoples ideas of good behavior and it might possibly be tolerated in some places, but judging from some remarks we have heard on the subject, it is our opinion that the thing will not continue all winter. We sincerely hope that a word to the wise will be sufficient in this case.

Mrs. Sleeper is visiting at Manchester and Ypsilanti.

We understand that Nathan Spencer and wife contemplate starting sometime this week for an extended visit through the west.

Viola Holdridge and Minnie Haviland are attending the Valley School.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

John Hause went to Chicago Tuesday morning.

L. W. Demuth spent Wednesday in Adrian.

Frank Thompson is visiting friends in Kalamazoo this week.

Mr. Fred Markum died at her home in Bridgewater last Saturday night after an illness of several months. The funeral was held at the Catholic church last Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Charles Bartlett arrived here last Wednesday. She expects to remain two or three weeks.

Mrs. William Wastell of Port Huron, is visiting at W. P. Wastell's.

Mrs. Will Amspoker of Manchester, was in town last Monday.

Remember the Harvest Social at Town Hall this week Friday night. The Clinton Local announced that there would be a program on the above named occasion. We understand from headquarters that it is a mistake.

Charles Willis of Milan, made Clinton friends a short visit Wednesday of last week.

E. R. Smith left for New York last Thursday, expecting to be away about ten days.

James Hause attended a funeral about seventeen miles west of here last Saturday. Rev. Joseph St John officiated.

Artie, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Schuler, died last Saturday of Cholera Morbus. The little fellow, with one of his playmates eat green watermelon Friday afternoon, and that night he was taken with vomiting, and was very sick for a little time but seemed to get better and fell asleep. When he awoke he had a spasm and died before he could be brought out of it. The funeral was held at the house Monday afternoon.

A few months ago one of the (business men?) of our village was caught in the highly honorable and ennobling act of "peeking in windows." Articles were published to the effect that the individual was known and that a repetition of the act would be followed by a disclosure of his identity. Last Thursday night this same person was engaged in the same business at a house in the east part of town. A favor would be conferred upon the public if the persecuted ones would make known the name of the scoundrel. Such low-lived, sneaking, business should not be allowed to go on without punishing when the offender is so well known.

Rev. James Kerridge has been transferred to Grass Lake.

Mr. Seth Sage and daughter of Ypsilanti, have been visiting at Mrs. Franc Sage's.

W. W. Demuth went to Jackson last Monday.

JOTTINGS FROM RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

Notwithstanding the rainy weather school opened with a goodly attendance.

Several students expect to enter this week who were unavoidably detained at home at the opening of the school.

The Superintendent, Hon. John U. Harkness has been untiring in his labors during the summer vacation and many improvements in school rooms and sleeping halls are the result of his efforts.

The enrollment is nearly equally divided between old and new students.

Friday afternoon the Board of Managers held a meeting at the Seminary building.

We take pleasure in noticing that two Seminary graduates, Will Green and Charles Comfort both of '84, have decided to take a collegiate course at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind., and that Mary Cornelius of '83 starts next week to enter upon her university course at Ann Arbor. Success to all three.

The advocates of base ball are just now "holding the fort" and pushing through a scheme whereby they can make money to pay the expenses of the game.

Many students spent last Sabbath at home or with friends in the neighborhood.

Albert Lloyd of '85 stopped over on his way to Pleasant Plain, Iowa, where he has a position in a Friends academy.

Deckie Eddy, of '85, her sisters and father made us a pleasant call Saturday last, taking home with her some of her lady friends to spend the Sabbath. Mr. E...y's load when he drove away reminded one of the loads of students he used to draw when Superintendent.

BRITTON BUDGET.

The chill has thawed out and we are promised pleasant weather.

A few of the farmers have cut their corn that the frost paid a visit.

The cyclone came too late for last week's notice. The sufferers are pretty well provided for now. By the aid of canvass, a great deal of damage was prevented to grain and hay.

Geo. Smith has got a new barn under way to take the place of the old one.

The busy burglar paid this place a visit last Saturday night. They broke into the blacksmith shop and secured tools with which they endeavored to break open the safe in H. McClure's grocery store. Either the tools did not suit or the safe was too well made for they failed to open it. They broke off the combination so an expert is needed to open the safe.

Miss Mary Scott and Miss Ada Hull have returned from a short visit at Fairfield, Ohio.

ONSTED ODDS.

Several changes have or are about to take place viz. Will Knapp having sold his house and lot here is about to move his family to Battle Creek. Will is in the employ of the M. & O. R. R. He has the best wishes of all.

Mr. Wilson Lee has sold his barn to Mr. Hines, who will move the same to his own lot just north of Lee's.

Warren Gilbert shipped several car loads of stock from here last week.

Dr. Ross has just received a fine set of tooth forceps, and any offending teeth will be drawn in short order by calling on him.

The missionary concert last Sunday eve was a success. "Some think it was well engineered by Miss Gibbs." To say the least it was well conducted.

SPRINGVILLE SIFTINGS.

Fine weather.

Farmers are busy sewing wheat.

A. J. Monaghan left for Adrian College Monday.

Chas. Stephenson expects to attend school at Jackson this winter.

The skating rink is to be opened Friday instead of Tuesday eve as reported by our correspondent to the Press.

Fred Groger is expected to return from the north and take charge of the cider mill this fall.

George Hines plays ball with the Adrian, fat nine at Toledo Friday. George is to be their catcher.

Directors of school districts should remember their annual report and that their time is already up, still there are some that have failed to report "at the present writing."

ADDISON ATOMS.

The missionary meeting at the Congregational church Sunday evening was one of unusual interest. A literary and musical program was presented which would do credit to an organization of much more pretentious proportions than this. The collection which amounted to $6.00 is now in the hands of the American Foreign Missionary Association, prominent among the objects of which is to enlighten and christainize the colored people, Chinese and Indians.

Miss Julia Primmer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Primmer, is in town visiting relatives and putting the finishing touches on her new brick residence at the north side of East Main street. This place is well located and when completed will make a pleasant home.

The ladies who are engaged raising money for the sidewalk fund are very anxious to collect all the unpaid amounts subscribed before the close of the present week, in order that the work of construction may commence as early as possible. Much credit is due them for the successful manner in which they have conducted the matter so far, but canvassing is hard work, whether it be for public purposes or otherwise, and it is quite necessary that subscribers should come forward with the cash as promptly as circumstances will permit. Payments may be made to O. B. Bowen or at G. M. Lewis' place. Cash up gentlemen.

Speaking of Deputy Sheriff Morley's success in recovering stolen property last week the types made us say horses instead of harnesses. Parties desiring further information concerning the matter should consult George Wheeler or G. W. Horton.

Our popular milliners, Skutt & Lane, made a trip to Toledo last week in the interest of their rapidly increasing business.

J. O. Power went to Hudson on business Monday.

Our farmers are making an extra effort to finish seeding this week, and in consequence of which matters are rather dull in town so far as country trade is concerned.

A little son of John and Susie Jackson fell from the hay mow in his father's horse barn Monday and got pretty thoroughly shaken up but not injured seriously as we are informed.

Charles Lake caught something over thirty eels in Bean Creek between this place and the lake last week which weighed from one and one half to four pounds, dressed.

O. B. Bowen made a hasty business trip to Big Rapids and other points north of here during the last week. He reports crops in a fair condition and not materially injured by frost.

Messrs Curley Scott and "Cale" Howell plastered the walls of the upper room at Smiley's hardware early in the week. Mr. S. now has two entire floors well stocked with the best goods the market affords in his line.

On trying to shut off the water at the grist mill Friday night the gate to the wheel refused to close and after getting it shut would not open again. Just what caused the trouble remained a mystery until Monday morning, when upon making a thorough examination, several large eels were found in side of the wheel and quite badly hashed up. No grinding was done on Saturday in consequence of the matter.

Bills are out for a lecture at the rink Saturday evening in which the subject "Half a Man" will be manipulated by Prof. D. M. Fisk of Hillsdale College. Owing to the abundance of subjects of that class in his own town from which to draw illustrations, we reasonably expect an extensive and able talk. All turn out and hear it.

Senator George A Smith was in the village Tuesday.

We learn from a letter written by M. E. Elmore of Scears, Osceola Co., this state, that their hay barracks containing 225 tons of hay, together with press and some other property were burned to ashes on the night of the tenth inst. The property belonged to Mr. V. Priest, the principal merchant of that place and was valued at about $4,000. No insurance. Cause of fire unknown. The new M. E. church just completed at the same place will be dedicated on the 20th inst.

THE WONDER

Is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve; and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

A. L. HINCKLEY,

MARSHALL'S DISCOVERY.

An Account of the Finding of Gold in California.

I see a notice of the death of James W. Marshall, who discovered gold in California. I became acquainted with Marshall, at Coloma, California. I knew him intimately, and was associated with him in business at that place, which is on the south fork of the American River. Marshall was a native of New Jersey. Gold was discovered in February, 1848, by Marshall and another man named Wiemer. I have forgotten Wiemer's first name. Marshall and Weimer built for Colonel Sutter a saw mill at Coloma, and had finished it in February, 1848. I am a stockholder in a company which now owns that saw mill. The mill had been erected at the head of a bar where the river bends around it in the form of the letter U. The mill race had been cut through the bar, and when the mill was started it was found that the race was too shallow, and for this reason the wheel of the mill was partially under water. The water was shut off, and Marshall and Weimer went down into the race to ascertain where it was to be dug deeper. A point about fifty yards below the mill, they concluded, was the place which obstructed the flow of water. Here Marshall said to Weimer: "What is that which shines just at the toe of your boot?" Weimer then picked up the shining piece, and they both thought it a piece of brass. They began to conjecture how it was possible for a piece of brass to get into the race. From the fact that no brass had been used in the construction of the mill, and that the piece found had been worn smooth, they concluded that it was not brass, and might be gold. On that day Mrs. Weimer was making soap, and for this purpose had made lye by leaching wood ashes. To test the metal found Mrs. Weimer boiled it several hours in this lye, and when she removed it from the lye it was as black as ink. These facts were stated to me by Marshall, Weimer, and Mrs. Weimer. I went with Marshall to Weimer's house to see the first piece of gold found in California, and then and there the whole history of the discovery was talked over by all three of the persons who participated in the discovery. Mrs. Weimer then showed the piece of gold. Its weight was $7, or, the value of the ounce being $16, in other words, 8¼ pennyweights. The form of the piece was that of a long, irregular pumpkin seed. It was still black as when taken out of the lye, except at one end, where the incrustation formed by the lye had been removed.

This discovery was made in February, 1848. The day I do not remember. As soon as this lye test had been made Marshall and Weimer went into the mill race and with wooden bowls washed out some two or three ounces of gold, and Marshall carried it to Monterey to ascertain if it were gold. This was the nearest place where the means to make the test could be had.

Colonel Sutter resided at his fort, near what is now the city of Sacramento. He was a Swiss and a classmate of Napoleon III. One evening, when going down the Sacramento River in a steamboat, Colonel Sutter told me the story of Marshall's return from Monterey. Colonel Sutter said: "I was in bed, and it was about two o'clock at night. I heard some one ride up to the fort, the horse running at the top of his speed. Then a banging at the gate; then I heard the clank of the spurs on the brick floors of the fort; then a pounding at the door of my room, and when I opened the door in rushed Marshall, shouting: 'It's gold! it's gold!'"

At the time Marshall and Weimer built the mill at Coloma the labor used was Indian labor. There were no other white men besides Marshall and Weimer. Marshall was unmarried and had no children. I think Weimer had, but do not distinctly remember.

When Marshall returned from Monterey to Coloma he brought with him about 300 Indians, and took to Webber Creek, distant about six miles from Coloma. There with his Indians he washed out a large amount of gold. His part was sufficient to buy from Sutter the saw mill at Coloma. In 1849 Marshall and John Winter owned the mill together, and they also owned Winter's Hotel. They sold the lumber at $500 a thousand, and the demand was greater than the mill could supply. I paid at the hotel $100 a week board, without a room. Marshall was then worth more than $100,000, but his generosity was without limit. He gave to all who asked of him. He had no business qualifications, and when sharp business men came in and built up the little town of Coloma, Marshall was soon traded out of all his property. His money he had lent where it would never be returned or had been given away.

Then Marshall became a prospector for gold mines. Several times I fitted him out with mules, men and provisions to go prospecting. He knew the country better than any other man at that time, and led the way to many rich placer mines; but he never found any that were rich enough for him. Often has he left mines where he could take out six or seven ounces per day to each man to seek an El Eorado where hundreds of thousands could be made in a week.

Since 1852 I have known nothing of Marshall, but I concur in the opinion that it is a disgrace to the State of California that she has suffered Marshall to die in want. To Sutter first and Marshall next is California most indebted. —Henry C. Gardiner, in N. Y. Sun.

Lace Dresses.

Gauze and lace dresses have two waists provided for them, one of which is of lace or gauze, and the other of velvet. White and pale pink velvet corsages with white lace skirts are elegant toilettes for watering-places. Shot velvet in such colors as brown with green or red with blue is the novelty for dark corsages worn with light canvas skirts. The trimming on the skirt is rows of velvet ribbon sewed on the canvas flounces before they are pleated. Plaid and striped velvets and those dotted over with small metallic balls like beads of gold or lead are worn as jackets with various light fabrics for skirts.—Harper's Bazar.

THE ORIGIN OF "O. K."

A Suggestion That Jackson Got His Famous Abbreviation From the Choctaw.

In the language of the Choctaw Indians, one of the most frequently recurring expressions is the emphatic oke, with which an affirmation or denial is concluded. This oke (pronounced with strong accent on the last syllable) is one of the substitutes for the copulative verb to be, which is wanting in Choctaw. Oke, as pronounced in Choctaw, has exactly the same sound as the alphabetic pronunciation of the letters O. K. in English.

The meaning of expression, as nearly as it can be conveyed in English, is: "That is true." "That is all so." A few examples, out of many that might be cited, will illustrate this. "The Choctaw Indian is a good fellow" is expressed thus: Hattak api huma Chahta achukmah oke, in which hattak api huma means "Indian" (literally, than-bo ly-red,) achukmah means "good," and oke is the copulative expression, "it is so." In the Rev. Cyrus Byington's Choctaw New Testament the first sentence of Matt. 5, 13: "Ye are the salt of the earth," is: gakni in huppi hucchia hoke, literally: "the earth is salt ye; that is so."

To General Andrew Jackson is attributed the introduction of the Choctaw word into our Anglo-American speech. Before the war of 1812, in voyages up and down the Mississippi and in trading expeditions overland from Nashville, Tenn., to Natchez, Miss., through the Choctaw Nation he was brought into frequent communication with the Choctaws.

General Jackson, as everybody knows, was prone to the use of downright and energetic methods of assertion. Hearing this emphatic oke so frequently uttered by the Choctaw people, he learned the meaning conveyed by it to the Choctaw mind and appropriated it, out of hand, to his own purposes. From him it passed over to the multitude. This account of the origin of O. K. has been current in the South for many years. If not true, it is, to say the least, bon trovato.

No one who has ever read an autograph letter of General Jackson's will easily credit the story that he was in the habit, when he was President of the United States, of indorsing, in Kalkom Buks, applications for office, with the letters O. K., under the belief that these were the proper initials for "all correct." Jackson was no scholar, but he was not so grossly ignorant of English orthography as to fall into a blunder of that sort. He may have indorsed documents with the letters O. K. as a jocular symbol of his favorite Choctaw expression. The story that these letters were seriously intended by him as an abbreviation of "oll korrect" was probably, as Mr. George Bancroft suggests, an a posteriori invention of the enemy—to wit, the Whigs—during the hot political contests in the days of the roaring '40's.

That the abbreviation O. K. was coined by Jackson himself and used by him long years before it passed into current slang, finds curious confirmation in an extract from the old court records of Sumner County, Tenn, quoted by Parton in his "Life of Jackson," vol. 1, p. 136:

"October 6, 1799. Andrew Jackson, Esq., proved a bill of sale from Hugh McGary to Gasper Mansker, for a negro man, which was O. K." ["A common Western mistake," adds Mr. Parton, "for O. R., which means Ordered Recorded. Hence, perhaps, the saying O. K."]

Is it not more likely that the O. K. of this entry was suggested by Jackson himself, as a brief way of saying, after the Choctaw fashion, that the claim had been legally made out?—American Magazine of History.

Flax.

A remarkable instance of the waste of a valuable product is afforded by the fact that out of 85,320 tons of flax fibre grown last year in the United States only 600 tons were utilized for manufacture. At the same time 5,000 tons of fibre are imported yearly. This waste, no doubt, occurs because farmers have given more attention to growing seed than to the fibre. Seed and fibre cannot be grown together. For seed, thin sowing and stout stalks are required, and this produces coarse fibre; for fine fibre, thick sowing and slender stalks with few side shoots are desired; moreover, for the fine silky fibre the stalks are cut before the seed is ripe. The ripe stalks, however, are exceedingly valuable for twine, but unfortunately this fibre is driven out of use by a substitute made out of paper.—N. Y. Times.

A Bright Boy.

Colonel Percey Yerger has got a boy named Sam, who has never been trained to habits of obedience. He gives all manner of impudence to his parents, who, having become desperate, put the boy in the grocery store of Mr. Sid Bluford, who has the reputation of being very severe, and is one of the heaviest retail grocers in Austin.

"Now, Sammy," said Mr. Bluford to the incipient tradesman, "when you see me waiting on a customer and clap my hands, you come to me right off. Now mind, I don't want any nonsense."

"I don't want any nonsense, either," retorted Sammy, "when you are waiting on a customer and clap your hands, if you see me shake my head you may know I'm not coming till I get ready."—Texas Siftings.

The "Knowsomethings."

A new secret political organization, called the "Knowsomethings," was gotten up in 1854, by some German Republicans, to offset the "Knownothings." The founders were Germans, and their constitution opposed the extension of slavery, stringent Sabbath laws, and the Maine liquor hypocrisy. It was short-lived, but upward of six thousand members were enrolled, and for some time an "organizer" made a good living by going about the country and organizing lodges, each one of which paid him twenty-five dollars for a charter.—Boston Budget.

In serious rheumatism it has accomplished astonishing results.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 17, 1885.

From eastern cities the intelligence comes that the fall trade has opened more auspiciously than for years past. There is an unprecedented magnitude in the delivery of dry goods especially, and well informed merchants anticipate a more favorable trade than at any time for the past five years. They believe the long depression is ended, and that the improvement will be permanent in its character, owing to the fact that there is an absence of any speculative spirit, in a very marked degree of caution in making purchases.

Western women are full of energy and very progressive as the following will show: In Iowa 355 women own and direct farms, 5 manage farms, 6 own and direct stock farms, 20 manage dairy farms, 5 own grain farms, 9 manage market gardens, 18 serve as county superintendents of schools, 37 manage high institutions of learning, 126 are physicians, 4 attorneys, and 26 dentists, 110 are professional musicians, 1 is a civil engineer. At Keokuk, Mrs. T. Nodler does the largest fancy grocery business in the state, established in 1856 and now amounting to $80,000 annually.—Household Beacon.

During the past year about $2,000,000 have been contributed by the English people for the benefit of the heathen and sent to foreign lands. If the revelations of the Pall-Mall Gazette are to be believed a large sum of money might be well spent in missionary work at home.—Exchange.

Yes, that is about the way things work everywhere. Churches make strenuous efforts to raise large sums of money for the benefit of distant heathen, and people who contribute stifle their consciences in this way, when a small sum of money judiciously spent in alleviating distress and suppressing vice at home, would do a vastly greater amount of good. The old axiom that charity begins at home is always true and everywhere applicable.

The public lands of the United States still open to settlement lie in nineteen states and eight territories. In each case, except Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, the Indian Territory and Alaska, land offices are established in charge of an officer known as Register of the Land Office, where the records of all surveyed lands are kept, and all applications concerning lands in each district are filed and inquiries answered. The public lands are divided into two classes. In one class the minimum price is $1 25 per acre, in the other $2 50 per acre. Titles to these lands may be acquired by private entry or location under the homestead, pre-emption and timber culture laws or, as to some classes, by purchase for cash.

It is the opinion of Governor Robie, of Maine, that the reason farmer's sons rush to the cities in such numbers is that agricultural pursuits are not profitable enough to keep ambitious boys at home. If his statement to the average income of farmers in that state, $500 per annum, is correct, it is not surprising that young men refuse to follow the business there. They can do as well as that at most any kind of labor, but by coming West and taking up land they can do a great deal better.

Farming has many heavy loads to carry in this country, and its returns are often unsatisfactory, but it may be doubted if the majority of the boys who abandon it better themselves in the long run. The overcrowded state of the cities and of all centers of production is having a steady depreciating effect on wages, and the manner of living to which mechanics and other workingmen are obliged to accustom themselves is not improving at all. Besides the processions moving from the farms to the towns, there are hosts of arrivals from the old countries, that a boy who voluntarily enters the struggles must be prepared for a competition that is fierce and dubious.

A movement from cities to farms would be much more healthful to the entire country and would solve many of the problems which now present themselves. A million of men might easily be spared from the great centers but the thousands who abandon the farms not to better themselves only add to the clamorous throng of bread-winners whose seasons of prosperity are full of hardships in comparison with the plenty of a farmer's life.

THE COUNTY FAIR.

Preparations for a Fine Exhibition Fast Nearing Completion—The Programme for the Horse Exhibition.

For weeks the officers of the agricultural society, supplemented by a large force of men, have been busy at work getting the grounds, buildings and track in apple pie order for the approaching county fair. Their efforts have been well directed and very successful, and when the day comes for the show to open—Tuesday, September 22—the chances all point to everything being in fair perfect as possible. A new and exceedingly substantial grand stand has been erected, the track has been put in such shape as to delight a horseman's heart, the grounds have been leveled, the buildings overhauled, new stalls erected—in short it looks as though the Monroe and one details had been, or should be, thoroughly attended to.

Perhaps the greatest interest of the exhibition centers around the various features of the horse department, and in order to afford all necessary information to exhibitors in that line, the management of the fair has arranged the following programme:

Secretary Graves informs us that at Detroit, last week, he made arrangements with Mr. Knight, of the Wabash railroad, to run special excursions to Adrian to the fair, for less than one fare for the round trip. Trains will leave Butler at 6 a. m. and arrive at Adrian 9:30; leave Romulus for the east at 7:58 a. m. and arrive at Adrian 10:55. Trains will leave Adrian going both east and west, at 7:15 p. m., standard time. The Lake Shore gives one and one-third rates from all stations within jurisdiction of the fair, and to accommodate from the east those who wish to come earlier than the noon train, coaches will be put on the freight leaving Brissfield 6:20 a. m. The freight train going west from Adrian on the L. S. R. R., will also be utilized, leaving Adrian at 6:10 p. m. Every available opportunity has been used to get people to the fair. Now let every man, woman and child do their level best to have something there for the people to see. Teams will be driven on to the grounds again as last year, and a supply of hay and grain will be hand, at liberal terms.—Adrian Times.

HOW CONGRESSMAN O'DONNELL GOT A FREE DINNER.

It was at the recent G. A. R. Encampment at Devil's lake, and on Thursday, the most crowded day, Jim O'Donnell, Member of Congress from the 3d District, a worthy comrade and one of the best of fellows, together with a friend had just come from the train and was seeking for something to eat.

Several well known comrades, with their families, occupied a pleasantly located family tent, arranged with side apartments, and a dining hall through the center, which at meal time might easily have been mistaken for an eating establishment.

The party were just sitting down to dinner when in walked two well-dressed strangers and without so much as a word to the occupants seated themselves at the table. It was O'Donnell and friend. They had been directed to an eating place near by and supposing this to be the one, and being attracted by the coziness of the place, determined to patronize it. The old vets in possession seeing that the intruders had probably made a mistake, and being of a generous turn and able to appreciate a good joke, treated their guests to the best that the table afforded, not omitting such sociabilities even as the circumstances permitted. The good wives also caught on to the situation and served coffee and desert, but made themselves scarce about the time the meal was done.

On arising from the table O'Donnell politely inquired for the treasurer of the institution whereupon he was as graciously informed by one of the vets that there was nothing to pay, that theirs was a private affair and that the comrades were welcome to their dinner.

Had Jim been ordered to charge a battery the look of consternation on his face would not have been half as great as it was when he received this intelligence. He first insisted on payment, then attempted an apology, looked down at the floor, but not seeing any holes to get through, beat a hasty retreat, but rallied again after a second thought and returning inquired of one of the ladies the names of the proprietors and giving his own, stating that he held a seat in Congress, and if any of them should come to Washington hungry to be sure and call on him.—Hudson Gazette.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine

For October opens with the first Installment of a new serial by Fannie Aymar Mathews, entitled "Dilettante Days," a bright and talking story of travel. The three chapters given take the reader across the Atlantic, through Liverpool, Chester and Warwick; the illustrations are appropriate and truthful. The two stories, "Love's Harvest," by Farjeon, and "What She Made of Her Life," by Mrs. Farmer, go on entertainingly. Two of Christ's Parables are given in that series, and Ignaz Seyfried, Sigismond Neukomm and Conradin Kreutzer are sketched in the Sacred Musician series. The Bible History article treats of the Kingdom of Judah from the fall of Samaria to the Babylonish captivity. The Rev. Edward A. Rand contributes a pleasant and reliable article "An Autumn Pilgrimage," and there is a good sketch, with extracts and illustrations, of Tennyson's latest dramatic poem, "Becket." There are also portraits and sketches of Dr. Hasbrouch, of the New Jersey Normal School; H. H. Bancroft, the Pacific Coast historian; Archbishop Walsh of Dublin; and Sir George Errington; besides many interesting shorter articles and poems. Published by Mrs Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 56 Park Place, New York city, at 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year, postpaid.

Much wheat has been sown in this vicinity. The acreage will probably be somewhat larger than last year.

The cider mills are in full blast. The apples are mostly too poor for any purpose except cider and vinegar.

Correspondents should bear in mind that communications for the HERALD should be mailed in time to reach us as early as Wednesday noon. Do not forget this please.

The causes of a separation between a Manchester husband and wife were that she had until long after their marriage concealed from him the fact that her handsome teeth were false, and that he had neglected to tell her that he snored in his sleep. They could not agree to set one fault against the other.

Those who know say that we have never had a long continued drought in Lenawee county, at least not for the past fifty years. The crops have never been a total failure except in some few very dry spots. There is no place in the United States where the farmer is surer of crops than right here in Lenawee county.

The Lake Shore management will substitute in the near future steamboat whistles for those now in use on their locomotives. The principle reason is that the proposed ones can be heard further and longer. When these are introduced the inhabitants of the villages along the line, can easily imagine themselves living in a river town.

Black walnut lumber is becoming scarce and high priced. It is not many years since board fences and fence posts were made from black walnut. The enterprising young man of to-day who will set out 25 acres of black walnut trees and give them reasonable care, may in 25 years be worth $30,000. A good piece of ground will grow a forest of black walnut trees 25 years suitable for all purposes for which the timber is used. It has been tried.—Battle Creek Journal.

Hudson Gazette: The Adrian Record says nature armed Smith and Stacy for the duel about to be fought. No doubt, but we failed to see any great "mus." displayed on the recent press excursion, notwithstanding the numerous opportunities that presented themselves. There was plenty of baggage to handle and a center pole that needed strong supporters to keep the sailboat canvass up during a heavy storm, but they were not there. Where duty called you would not find them.

An exchange tells of a man residing on the line of a railroad who has taught his dog to bark vociferously at every passing train. The impulse of the fireman is to watch for the barking dog, and throw hard pieces of coal at him in passing. The result to the owner is that he has delivered at his door all the coal he requires for his own use free of cost, and is now contemplating the opening of a coal yard for the supply of his neighbors. He thinks he can compete in prices with the oldest coal dealers in the country.

Chauncey Saxton bought a traction thresher engine at Toledo last Monday and started to take it to his home in Raisin in the afternoon, accompanied by an agent. The agent neglected to put a govenor belt on it and consequently the engine run kind of jerky. All went well until they were passing the Quaker mill pond when in trying to turn out for a mud hole in front of the mill the agent turned the valve the wrong way, and before it could be reversed it plunged into the deepest part of the pond, carrying the men with it. The engine was entirely submerged the smoke stack being the only part to be seen.

As there are so many ways in which farmers have been and are being swindled right along, the following from the Excelsior may be the means of preventing some in this vicinity from getting into the clutches of these traveling scoundrels: "A hugh swindling game has developed in this quarter of the mundane sphere. Two men call at a farmer's house representing themselves to be photographers and agreeing to take a photograph of his house and surroundings for the sum of 50 cents, no money to be paid until a photograph arrives and, of course, the farmer has to sign the agreement to forward the money upon receipt of a photograph. When, in the course of a few days, the victimized farmer is looking for his 'home paper,' he receives notice there is a note of his in the bank, and it says 'please settle.'

Notices for a temperance mass meeting in Ridgeway recently appeared with simply "Hon. G." announced as speaker. The job printer doubtless went out for a drink at that point, and forgot on his return to complete the name.—Adrian Record.

It is a fact which few people would credit, yet nevertheless true, that the Friday superstition is deeply rooted among people whom one would suppose were far above such folly. There is scarcely ever a marriage license issued on Friday. Ticket brokers well know that no one starts on a long journey on Friday, as a rule. People make short trips on that day, drummers keep on the wing, but those who travel for pleasure, and especially women, avoid a start on Friday just as studiously and carefully as the devil is supposed to fight holy water.

Brooklyn Exponent: A pleasant family reunion held at the residence of Dr. Jones last week was the occasion of much joy and mirth, as the several members present had not been together since they left the parental home at Jonesville, one by one, over thirty years ago. The members of the Jones family present were as follows: Dr. L. M. Jones, of Brooklyn; Col. R. D. Jones, of Hillsboro, Texas; Claudius C. Jones, of Walworth, Wis.; Mrs. H. O. Clark, of Jonesville. There were also present to add pleasure to the occasion Mr. Frank Guy, wife and and child and Miss Lucy Clark, of Jonesville, Dr. O. Q. Jones, wife and son, and Miss Cora Abbot, of Tecumseh, and Miss Lisuella Doyle, a niece and member of Dr. Jones' family.

Just now, when it is seriously contemplated to reduce letter postage to one cent, it is interesting to reflect that fifty years ago a letter carried thirty miles was subject to a "sixpence" postage; ten cents would carry it eighty miles, eighteen pence would insure its delivery a distance of one hundred and fifty miles, and it took a quarter of a dollar to get that letter four hundred miles. Wages in those days were fifty cents per day. Thus a young man whose girl lived four hundred miles away was obliged to labor half a day to obtain the twenty-five cents with which to procure the stamp necessary to carry the renewed assurance of his undying affection. No one ought to distrust the love of young men in those days who wou'd write oftener than once a week.

A mistake in putting up morphine for quinine, made by a very competent druggist of Hoboken, New York, was the cause of the death of two prominent young ladies of that city and the probable death of the druggist, who took a dose of atropia when he heard the result of his error. This is one of the mistakes druggists are liable to make, especially when the drugs are taken out of the original packages and put in glass labled bottles of the same size; the names are somewhat similar, Morphia Sulphas and Quinia Sulphas, and their appearance is so much alike that to distinguish, a test is required. The safest way is never to remove the morphine from its original package except in dispensing, and we believe that is generally the method in small towns.

BOLD BURGLARS.

They Enter Wolcott Marsh's Meat Market on Railrord St., Blow open the safe and Depart with its Contents.

People residing in the neighborhood of Mr. Wolcott Marsh's meat market on Railroad street were rudely awakened from their slumbers last Sunday morning about 1:30 o'clock, by a dull rumbling sound as would proceed from an explosion of gunpowder, but as a heavy storm was prevailing at the time it was supposed to be a heavy clap of thunder, and nothing more was thought of it until about six o'clock, when persons passing the market noticed that half a dozen panes of glass were broken out of the front windows and that something was wrong on the inside. Mr. Marsh was immediately sent for and on entering the place found the safe open and the strong iron box on the inside containing valuable papers and $157.50 in cash was missing. The money drawer was laying on the counter and three dollars, all it contained, had been taken from that.

The burglar or burglars had cut a hole in the glass in the back door near the latch, and reaching in pulled out a piece of steel, which had been used to bolt the door. Three holes, two on top and one in front near the combination, had been drilled in the safe, in which the powder was placed. The door was blown completely from the hinges, the bolts torn out, and the inside damaged considerably. A brace and drill belonging to Mr. I. B. Richart, the wagon maker, was found on the counter, which had been stolen from his shop and used to drill the holes. The shock had broken out six panes of glass from the front window and several lamp chimneys. The job was evidently done by an experienced hand, as the holes were drilled in exactly the right place and where they would do the greatest execution. Sheriff Whitmore was sent for, and immediately went to work to ferrit out the perpetrators of the deed. Monday afternoon the iron box was found in a coal car on the east side track of the L. S. & M. S. railroad. The papers were found inside but the money of course was missing. A couple of chisels also belonging to Mr. Richart was found in the car.

Saturday night about 11:30 o'clock, Mr. Marsh had counted his money and intended to put it in his pocket and take it home, but changed his mind as it was such a late hour and the night was dark, and put it in the safe. He noticed some one on the outside while counting it, but thought nothing of it at the time, but now believes that he was the burglar. The night watch does not take in the buildings down as far as that in his rounds, and as the night was stormy, everything was favorable for the cracksmen. Mr. Marsh has the sympathy of the community in his loss, which is a severe one to him, and the evil doers when caught should have speedy and sure punishment for their crime.

Monday afternoon Deputy Sheriff Burtch, of Adrian, arrested a man named John Kennedy, a noted and professional gambler who has resided here for a short time.

RINK RACKET.

Season of '85-6 is open.

A very little difference is seen in the crowd this year from last.

Saturday nights always draw a big crowd.

Knapp's band is on deck and play better than ever. Their new pieces last Saturday were immense. What is a rink without good music.

Chas. Manning, of Deerfield, was rinkulating last Saturday evening.

Manager Cash will not lose anything by admitting ladies free. The average Tecumseh dude will not go there and skate with a row of handsome girls sitting idle on a bench, not much. A Yankee dood'll do what's propah and get half a dozen of them a pair of skates.

George Miller, of the Adrian Times, was gracefully ambling around the rink last Saturday night. It was like old times to have some one from Adrian show the poor Tecumseh skaters how to skate.

Several couples from Clinton and Manchester attended the rink last Saturday night.

Harry Corbin, the telephone operator, does'nt take a back seat for any body in the matter of fancy skating.

Young man if you would win the belt for being the fastest skater, prepare for it by practising, as the race will come off a week from next Wednesday.

L. F. Wheeler will give his night in Russia and Spain in the Opera House this, Thursday evening. At the present time Russia and Spain manage to furnish a great deal of interesting reading to Americans, and Mr. Wheeler's beautiful views of cities and places of interest in the two countries will prove a great attraction, showing by immense photographs, beautiful streets, grand palaces and churches in St. Petersburgh, Moscow, Madrid, LaGraizo, Sarragossa and other Spanish cities. Mr. Wheeler has concluded to try the popular low prices, and the admission will be 10 cents for children under 12 years old, and 15 cents for adults. This entertainment ought to fill the Opera House to overflowing.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

The dream of Blissfield is about to be realized—a roller mill.

The Adrian Times celebrated its twentieth birthday last Friday.

Burt Osgood, of Rome, was before Justice Long, of Adrian, on Saturday for assault and battery. The case was dismissed on the motion of the assistant prosecutor.

A game of base ball played at Adrian last Saturday, between the Adrian and Wolf Creek clubs, resulted in a victory for the former club. Score, Adrian 18, Wolf Creek 8.

Drs. Nix and Dodge, of Hudson, lately removed an entire cancerous lip from the face of Geo. Camp of Lickley's Corners. Camp has less "lip," but a better chance for his life than before.

Seneca De Long, formerly residing near Hudson, but more recently a resident of Maple Rapids, committed suicide on Aug. 25th. Despondency over the death of his wife was the supposed cause.

Jackson Courier: A live wild lynx is scaring the people of Napoleon township half out of their wits. Several have seen the "animile," and its proportions are said to be tremendous. One party in this city who saw the tracks several days ago is scared yet.

The people of Lenawee county have long boasted of the immunity their section enjoyed from tornadoes, cyclones and other destructive storms. The experience of Sept. 8, 1885, has made them think that boasting hereafter may be omitted. The cyclone is no respecter of persons and places, and is liable to drop down at any time and anywhere. It is getting to be too common for comfort.

Clinton Local: Last week David Brooks lost a valuable horse in a very singular manner. His hired man was dragging, and when turning the corner of the lot the horse was going too slow to just suit the fancy of the driver, when he gave a jerk on the line which brought one of the horses back so as to get his legs in the drag, throwing him down, and the other one top of him, killing the horse instantly.

The tri-state fair at Toledo was a distinct failure, owing to the bad weather. Michigan has carried off several honors, however, among which are: E. Skinner, Monroe, first on 4-yr. stallion; W. H. Smith, Hillsdale, first on matched coached team, second on light matched team; S. Downey, Jackson, swine premiums; E. H. Reynolds Monroe, and D. G. Edminston, Adrian, fruit premiums; Blanche Campbell, Marshall, best painted tidy.

Adrian Press: Worthless curs invaded the fold of John Johnston, of Medina, last week, and the usual havoc followed. Two sheep were killed and nineteen more were bitten. Of these, several had to be "killed to save their lives," as the darkey said about the chickens. The remarkable thing about sheep killing by dogs, is the great number that the dogs attack. Just what leads them to bite and mangle so many sheep, and always on the first exploit of the dog in that business, is one of the points that can't be understood. Mr. Johnson's loss is quite heavy as his sheep were valuable. The dogs were convicted but that don't pay the damages.

Morenci Observer: Last Friday night Mr. A. A. Abbott found that his two-acre melon patch was being invaded by a couple of fellows who also discovered his presence about the same time, and thereupon throwing down the three melons which each had picked, they rushed to a wagon standing by the roadside and containing two other persons (man and woman.) Mr. Abbott soon procured a horse and after following them a distance of 2½ miles, succeded in heading them off. He politely informed them that a five dollar william would pay him for his trouble, and that sum was very quickly passed into his hands. Their names are—well, ask Mr. Abbott.

DIAMONDS.

The Difficulty of Identifying Them if Removed From Their Settings.

Wanting to buy a few precious stones to distribute among my friends before I get my life insured and go to the seaside, I interviewed a diamond merchant down town, and while we were comparing the gems the conversation turned upon the difficulty of identifying diamonds. Some people assert that they can recognize a certain stone as accurately as other people can recognize a certain man. You take your diamonds to be cleaned or reset, and you are sure that you receive the same stones again, although others less valuable, or even paste imitations, may have been substituted. But the experts are sure that they can never be deceived unless the stone has been recut. Upon this point the diamond merchant told me a good story.

One day another firm in the same business—call it Smith & Jones—sent him a diamond which was very fine and very cheap. It was set in a ring so that he could not weigh it; but after examining it carefully he concluded that its cheapness must be caused by some defect, and so he returned it to the owners. The next week an agent called with another fine cheap stone, which my friend concluded to purchase. Before binding the bargain he thought he would take it over to Smith & Jones and see what they said about it. They praised it enthusiastically. "Why, it's a bargain!" cried Smith; and so my friend bought the diamond.

"Aha!" said Jones, when they met the next day, "you did buy our stone after all, and you paid fifty dollars more for it than we asked for it originally."

This was gall and wormwood. My friend hurried back to his office and looked at the diamond. Sure enough, it was the stone which Smith & Jones had sent to him. The clever firm had angled for him through an agent and caught him nicely. He matched the diamond, had a pair of ear-rings made and bided his time.

At last he gave the ear-rings and his price to an agent and sent him out to sell them. The agent came back and said: "Smith & Jones want one of these stones. Will you split the pair?"

"Yes," said the diamond merchant, "sell them this one," and he took one of the stones out of its setting: "the price is so much a carat, as the color is very fine."

When the agent returned with the check my friend sat down and wrote Smith & Jones the following note:

"Quits! You have bought back your own stone and given me ninety-seven dollars profit. I prefer Pomery Sec."

It was a case of diamond cut diamond, and it confirmed my doubts as to the possibility of identifying unset stones.—N. Y. Star

The Straits of Malacca.

The Straits of Malacca comprise a long strip of water, extending from southeast to northwest, and connecting the Bay of Bengal with the South Pacific Ocean, or rather with that portion of it which is sometimes called Australasia. It is in itself a pretty piece of water, through which, though you are never out of sight of land on one side or the other, a steamer is nearly two days in passing. On the east the peninsula of Malacca thrusts down a long, slender strip of land, like a slim finger, far into equatorial waters. On the west the Island of Sumatra, longer and almost as slender, and having nearly the area of France, extends farther to the south, being only separated from Java by the Straits of Sunda. The Straits Settlements comprise the four cities of Singapore, Malacca, Penang and Wellesley, with certain dependencies nominally under the rule of sultans or rajahs, but really controlled by the British residents in each. Singapore is on an island fifty or sixty miles in circumference at the lower end of the straits. The population of the island is about 150,000, of whom nearly 100,000 are Chinese. Penang is on an island nearly the same size at the upper end of the straits, and Malacca is about half way between. Penang Island contains a population of 200,000, with perhaps 80,000 Chinese. Malacca has about 100,000, with 25,000 Chinese, and a larger proportion of native Malays than either Penang or Singapore. The European population here, including the British troops on duty, rarely exceeds fifty.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Bacteria.

Londoners, and yet more Parisians, says the St. James' Gazette, must hope that bacteria are not such dangerous animals as they are sometimes said to be by their enemies; for the air of large cities is full of them. The proportion of bacteria in a cubic metre of atmospheric air is, according to M. de Parville, writing in the Journal des Debats, 0.6 in sea air, one in the air of high mountains, sixty in the principal cabin of a ship at sea, 200 on the top of the Pantheon, 360 in the Rue de Rivoli, 6,000 in the Paris sewers, 36,000 in old Paris houses, 40,000 in the new hospital of the Hotel Dieu, and 79,000 in the old hospital of the Pitie. It is gratifying to know that in Ryder Street, St. James', a cubic metre of air (taken from the open street) contains only 240 bacteria, whereas in the Rue Rivoli the same quantity of air contains 360. The superiority of London air as compared with the air of Paris is shown not only by its containing fewer bacteria, but also by the rate of mortality being smaller. The greater purity or lesser impurity of the air of London is accounted for by London being nearer than Paris to the sea, by its covering a greater extent of ground in proportion to the population, and by its houses being newer. Old houses are all, according to M. de Parville, haunted by bacteria and the ghosts of bacteria.

—"Was it a forgery?" asks a magazine writer. We are unable to say without knowing more about it. If he escaped to Canada it was probably only a sharp business speculation.—N. Y. Ledger

VEGETARIANISM.

A Vagary Which Has Failed to Secure an Extensive Following.

Vegetarianism, notwithstanding the scientific argument on which it builds its theory, and the strenuous efforts made last year at the London International Health Exhibition to popularize the method by means of six-penny dinners, has somehow failed to impress the general public. Hitherto the eating-houses conducted on vegetarian principles and the public lectures delivered in the same interest have appealed, almost exclusively, to the convenience, tastes and necessities of clerks and mechanics. But reforms seldom spread widely and rapidly in this country, unless initiated or at least encouraged, by wealthy people. And among these vegetarianism has much to contend with.

It is unpleasant to go about branded as an "arian" of any kind; hospitable hosts and hostesses are naturally distressed to have to entertain guests who steadily refuse soup, fish, entrees and roti, and attract to themselves furtive glances of wonder or concern by persistant abstinence from every comestible, save green peas and salad; nor is it easy for the uninitiated, even with the best cuisine at command, to provide for eccentric convives dishes from which animal products are wholly excluded.

The vegetarian, therefore, if he be rigid and consistent in his practice, speedily drops out of the dining lists of most of his unregenerate friends; he becomes a marked man, and even his sanity is sometimes held in question by conventionally-minded acquaintances who are unamenable to the persuasiveness of economical statistics or of chemical analyses. It is, therefore, not to be wondered at that an elect few only among the most strong-minded and enthusiastic in this faithless generation have courage and ardor sufficient to face opposition tacit and overt, with which the gospel of vegetarianism is generally assailed, and that the tendency of all thorough-goers in the cult is to slink into the retirement of country life, whence, when the bugle call of their society sounds, they flock together to the metropolis or to some provincial town, hold their annual meeting, deliver impassioned exhortations to inquisitive and bewildered audiences, banquet daily on mushrooms and macaroni, and depart again, invigorated and cheered, to their rural hermitages.

All this is inevitable so long as the partisans of a very worthy reform insist upon the retention of a name and a programme which, for many excellent reasons, are repellent to the majority of sociable people, and which are inapplicable to the views and practice of a majority of professed adherents of the propaganda in question.

Most so-called "vegetarians" are not really vegetarians at all. Their macaroni is stewed in milk and sprinkled with Parmesan cheese, their new potatoes are served au beurre, and—miraculum ovum—fish even sometimes finds its way, in the shape of oyster patties, or of the yet more flagrant filet de sole or prawn curry, to the tables of Pythagoreans whose area gate the hand of the butcher boy never contaminates.

Akreophagy — non-flesh eating — would, in innumerable cases, prove acceptable, and secure gangrous countenances where the sterner evangel of vegetarianism is doomed to rejection. We may still be happy with eggs, milk, cream, butter, cheese and the products of the sea, even in the event of the abolition of slaughter houses and battues. Our own near relatives, the monkeys, whom Darwinian vegetarians are wont to hold up to us as examples of abstinence, do not abjure buns or sponge cakes, and in their native woods they are well known to be terrible egg stealers.

Flesh and blood, in their grosser and more repulsive forms, may be avoided with advantage alike to the interests of health, economy, sentiment and sanitary considerations; but experience and reason bear testimony to the desirability, if not to the absolute necessity of retaining the services of the dairy and fishing crafts. The varying climate of the zone in which we live, our active habits and the nervous exhaustion entailed on most of us by a perpetual struggle for existence, compel us to ingest a larger amount of stimulating and concentrated food than is necessary to the contemplative and indolent races of hotter countries.

We may indeed admit, with Ovid and Shelby, that the best and almost ideal diet for a man is one composed purely of fruit and grain; but then, an ideal climate and an ideal existence are the imperative conditions of such an Arcadian mode of sustenance. Unfortunately we are not Arcadians; nor do we lead the reposeful life of our fruit-eating progenitors of the Golden Age; pineapples, pomegranates and pippins, if purchased plentifully enough to support exhausted nature without other aid, would entail heavy demands on the purse; and mere pulse, or pease pudding, cheap and nutritious though they may be, tempt us not. We must have savory and toothsome edibles, daintily served and pleasant to the smell, charmingly varied and flavored secundum artem.—N. Y. Herald.

—A train on the West Shore Railroad was run the other day between Buffalo and Frankfort at a rate which is said to be the fastest on record. The distance is 201.7 miles, and it was made in four hours—50.42 miles per hour, including stops, or 59.63 per hour running time. The fastest portion of the run was from Alabama to Genessee Junction, when 36.3 miles were made in thirty minutes, or at the rate of 72.6 miles per hour. Attached to the locomotive were a West Shore baggage car, a West Shore directors' car and a Baltimore and Ohio private car.—Buffalo Courier.

—An Irish settler who had amassed a handsome independence in the cattle ranches in the West advises all intending Irish emigrants when they reach America to go to Nebraska, Wyoming, Kansas, Ohio, Minnesota, Illinois or Washington Territory. Labor is in great demand, and a workman who would only get $15 a month and board in the Eastern States would get $30 a month and board there. The climate is good, and there are no Irish poor who cannot, by sobriety attain independence.—N. Y. Sun.

GRANT'S CAREER.

His Life Savoring More of Romance Than of Reality.

The story of General Grant's life savors more of romance than reality; it is more like a fable of ancient days than the history of an American citizen of the nineteenth century. As light and shade produce the most attractive effects in a picture, so the contrasts in the career of the lamented General, the strange vicissitudes of his eventful life, surround him with an interest which attaches to few characters in history.

His rise from the obscure lieutenant to the commander of the veteran armies of the great republic, his transition from a frontier post of the untrodden West to the Executive Mansion of the nation; his sitting at one time in a little store in Galena, not even known to the Congressman from his district, at another time striding through the palaces of the Old World with the descendants of a line of kings rising and standing uncovered in his presence: his humble birth in an Ohio town scarcely known to the geographer; his distressing illness and courageous death in the bosom of the nation he had saved—these are the features of his marvelous career which appeal to the imagination, excite men's wonder, and fascinate the minds of all who make a study of his life.

Many of the motives which actuated him and the real sources of strength employed in the putting forth of his singular powers will never be fully understood, for added to a habit of communing much with himself was a modesty which always seemed to make him shrink from speaking of a matter so personal to him as an analysis of his own mental powers, and those who knew him best sometimes understood him the least. His most intimate associates often had to judge the man by the results accomplished, without comprehending the causes which produced them. Even to the writer of this article, after having served with the General for nine years continuously, both in the field and at the Presidential Mansion, he will in some respects always remain an enigma. His memoirs, written on his death-bed, to be published only after his decease, furnish the first instance of his consent to unbosom himself to the world. In his intercourse he did not study to be reticent about himself; he seemed rather to be unconscious of self. When visiting St. Louis with him while he was President, he made a characteristic remark showing how little his thoughts dwelt upon those events of his life which made such a deep impression upon others.

Upon his arrival a horse and buggy were ordered, and a drive taken to his farm, about eight miles distant. He stopped on the high ground overlooking the city, and stood for a time by the side of the little log house which he had built partly with his own hands in the days of his poverty and early struggles. Upon being asked whether the events of the past fifteen years of his life did not seem to him like a tale of the "Arabian Nights," especially in coming from the White House to visit the little farmhouse of early days, he simply replied, "Well, I never thought about it in that light." — General Horace Porter, in Harper's Magazine.

A CURSE.

This is What the Possession of Too Much Land Involves.

The natural tendency of this age is towards too much expansion. Men are not satisfied with a moderate business, with making a good living and a reasonable sum besides; but they wish to amass millions, and so spread out and worry themselves prematurely old, and in a majority of cases die, leaving no more than they would had they confined themselves to the smaller fields and not having taken a tithe of the comfort they would have then enjoyed. The Rural New Yorker makes a note of this, and calls the attention of farmers to the fact that in no business is this more the case than in farming. There is many a man who, when the owner of a single farm of fifty or one hundred acres, was a splendid farmer, keeping his fields clean and well cultivated, putting in his crops in good season and in the best order, and securing each as soon as mature, and keeping the best of stock and thus made money, lived in comfort, and, besides supporting his family well, laid by a small sum for a "rainy day," and was happy. But, ambitious to be rich, he reached out after another farm, and since this was bought he has found so much work to do, so much business to look after, that he has not had time to do anything well; his fields are weedy, his crops, always sowed late and in a poor manner, and not more than half manured or tended, give but poor return, and even these are not harvested until over-ripe, and then in a slovenly manner, leaving him no profit. As a result, he is always hard up, and works beyond his strength, while his family have to get along with the bare necessaries of life, and no one has any time for comfort or happiness.

Is this a fancy picture? Look about and you will find its reality in every neighborhood. And many a one, burdened with too much land, would be glad to sell the surplus and return to the home farm, only for a false pride. By far the safest and most sensible way is to be sure that one farm is improved all it can be, and made "as rich as a garden"—forced to produce its largest crops at the greatest profit—before another acre is added. As a rule larger profit lies in the direction of better farming and larger crops, rather than in more acres.—Cleveland Leader.

—Minute instructions are given to the officers of the Salvation Army how to behave, what to read, what to wear, and as to marriage. They may not marry or court the first year, and may not become engaged at any time without the consent of the General. As to reading, they are told that is better not to read secular newspapers, but if they do look at them, it is to be only a look. They are to read no novels, to avoid all the ordinary religious books, all the twaddle and trash and goody-goody, milk-and-water stuff, and to confine themselves to the Bible, general orders, the hymn book and the War Cry.—N. Y. Sun.

LORD NAPIER.

How a Great Military History was Conceived and Written.

One day early in 1823 he went for a walk with Lord Langdale, one of his intimate friends, over some fields which are now covered by the mansions of Belgravia. The conversation turned on Southey's recently published narrative of the Peninsular war. Lord Langdale was greatly struck by Napier's remarks on the events of the struggle and the characters of the principal actors. Suddenly he asked him what he was thinking of doing. "Do you mean," replied Napier, "where am I going to dine?" "No," said Lord Langdale; "what are you thinking of turning to as an occupation?" Then he urged him to turn to literature. The article on Jomini proved that he could write. He must not waste his life in mere amusement. Why should he not write a history of the war himself? On returning home Napier told his wife what Lord Langdale had said, and added that he himself felt doubtful whether he was clever enough to write properly such a book as a history of the war. But she, believing firmly in her husband, encouraged him to try. For several nights he lay awake thinking over the matter. At last his scruples were overcome by the thought that he might be able at least to vindicate the calumniated memory of Moore, and he resolved to make the attempt. Those of his acquaintances who did not really know him were surprised to hear of his intention, and remarked that being a comparatively young man, he was presumptuous to think that he could write such a history. Having formed his resolve he lost no time in proceeding to execute it. First of all, he called upon the Duke of Wellington and asked him for the loan of his papers. The Duke replied that he had himself thought of writing a plain, didactic history of the war, which should be published after his death. Till then it would be impossible to make known the whole truth without giving pain to many worthy officers, whose only fault had been dullness. For these reasons he told Napier that he could not lend him his private papers; but he intrusted him with a number of important documents, and gave him authority to obtain from the Quartermaster-General, Sir George Murray, all his orders of movements. In his own accord he promised to answer any questions as to matters of fact which Napier might wish to ask him in the course of his work. Murray, however, refused to let Napier have the orders of movements, stating that he reserved them for a history which he himself intended to write. After taking these preliminary steps Napier went to Paris to collect materials for the French side. He walked about the streets, exploring the contents of the bookstalls, and bought every book that seemed likely to be of any use to him. He also went regularly to the Depot de la Guerre and made copious extracts from the documents which were stored on its shelves. On returning to England he took up his abode for a time at Strathfieldsaye for the purpose of consulting the Duke. Marshal Soult, with whom when in Paris he had struck up an acquaintance, lent him valuable papers; he corresponded with Marshal Jourdan, and received information from officers who had served on the staff of Ney and Masscna. He also collected an immense mass of letters and journals from British officers. —National Review.

THE BODY'S TOLERANCE.

Little Things Which Often Prove Dangerous, While Severe Injuries Sometimes Produce Trifling Results.

Sometimes a slight blow on the head has resulted in death, or, what is worse, in the permanent loss of reason. A mere scratch on the hand, or a sliver in the foot, or a grain of dust lodging in the eye, or the tiniest fish-bone entering the wind-pipe, has proved fatal. Such facts may lead us to accept the poet's statement, "The spider's most attenuated thread is cord, is cable, to man's hold on life." But there is another class of facts quite as surprising, that are different from these.

An iron bar has been driven through the brain, with a considerable loss of brain substance, and yet no permanent harm has come to body or to mind. The fact is, while a mere prick in a particular part of the brain (the medulla oblongata) may cause death, the great bulk of the brain is exceedingly tolerant of many forms of injury.

Even the heart is much more tolerant than is generally thought. The physician may thrust his fine instrument through it with safety. An insane woman sought to kill herself by piercing it with a hairpin, but wholly failed of her purpose, although the pin interfered with the natural movements of the heart.

A woman swallowed a paper of pins. The pins traversed various organs and tissues of the body, and yet she recovered from the local inflammation.

A boy was brought to the hospital insensible, and nearly dead from asphyxia (want of breath). The doctor having run a catheter down the wind-pipe, a piece of chestnut was coughed up. The next day there was evidence that another piece was lodged in another of the bronchial tubes. It was impossible to dislodge it. There followed all the symptoms of acute consumption (pthisis): high temperature, sweating, emaciation, copious expectoration, offensive matter, and a large cavity. Yet the boy in three months returned home convalescent, and six months later the cavity had disappeared.—Youth's Companion.

—A Texan inventor claims to be able to send the voice across the Atlantic Ocean by means of a magnetic telephone which he has contrived. His instrument, which differs essentially from the telephone now in use, has successfully transmitted sound seventy-five miles. This invention, if it will do all that is claimed for it, will go far toward assisting those devoted persons who are seeking to bring out a universal language.—Chicago Current.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics reports that the total value of beef, pork and dairy products exported during the eight months ending August 31, 1885, were $64,218,576, against $62,648,275 for the similar period in 1884.

By the bursting of a boiler in Montgomery & Price's steam cotton gin, near Crockett's Bluff, Tennessee, on the 14th the fireman was instantly killed, and Montgomery and two others were severely injured.

William H. Taylor, of Worcester, Mass., aged forty, shot his wife and himself on the 14th. Both are probably fatally wounded. Temporary insanity caused by illness is the supposed cause.

Henry Arthur & Co., one of the oldest leather houses in New York City, assigned on the 14th. Liabilities and assets not stated. The firm were rated at from $150,000 to $200,000.

The first of the three contests for the America's cup between the yachts Puritan and Genesta was won on the 14th by the American yacht Puritan, which came in six minutes ahead of her competitor.

John R. Smith, a farmer of Kenton, O., a few days ago drew $275 from the savings bank to lift a note in the National Bank. The National Bank closed before he could reach it, and he carried the money home. Burglars entered his house in the night and drugged and robbed him of the money. He drew the money to lift a note held by a lightning-rod firm, who beat him last year by raising a note of $75 to $275.

DIED.

KNEELAND.—At Tecumseh, on Sunday, Sept. 6th, 1885, Mrs. Sarah Kneeland, in the 73d. year of her age.

Mrs. Sarah Brewer was born in East Hartford, Connecticut, Nov. 15th, 1812. On Oct. 8th, 1835, she was united in marriage with Mr. T. T. Kneeland and came at once with him to Tecumseh where they have lived ever since. For a long time Mrs. K. had been an invalid and for the last year had been a confined and patient sufferer within her home. More than once before this end came she had seemed to be very near death. Had she lived a few weeks longer the golden wedding anniversary, making 50 years of married life, would have been reached, and had her health permitted it would have been celebrated by a family gathering.

It is not merely in recognition of long residence in the place however that this memorial sketch is prepared, nor is it simply in tribute of her excellence as wife and mother which is lovingly acknowledged by husband and children. Besides these claims on our respect, she had qualities which procured for her the universal esteem and confidence of the society in which she lived. As a christian, she sought not to be conspicuous, nor was she self-confident; yet she was most conscientious and sincere. As a member of the social circle she was dignified, yet at the same time approachable and kind. As a friend no one could be more faithful and true. In church and society and home, she will be greatly missed and mourned. Her's was one of those quiet, useful lives whose worth is seldom fully appreciated until it is looked upon in retrospect. We have thus been called upon to record the loss of one more of those who have given to Tecumseh society the high reputation it has hitherto held. One more brief tribute is hereby paid to a sterling class of characters, who are all too rapidly taking their final departure from us. We express high interest in the future of our town when we express the hope that those who take the place of the fathers and mothers who are so fast disappearing, may emulate the virtues and attain the excellence of those that have passed, or are passing away. Besides a husband to mourn her loss Mrs. K. leaves two sons, Mr. Henry Kneeland of Leadville, Col., and Mr. Frank Kneeland, of St. Louis, Mich.

Godey's Lady's Book for October is a brilliant number, opened with a handsome steel engraving of "The Lady of Lyons." This picture illustrates the story of Bulwer's famous drama of that title which has been carefully transcribed for the magazine in a narrative form. "The Lady of Lyons" is a fine piece of work. The subject is one of high literary and dramatic merit, Pauline being a character made famous by the authorship of genius and the histrionic talent of the best actresses the world over. A novel design in colors for a sofa pillow or quilt accompanies the usual illustrations, and the story matter presents some notable features. "The Yoke of Honor" approaches a final climax, having held the interest of its readers to the very end. Miss Emily Read, the authoress of "Wearithorne" has a strong dramatic story entitled "Another Christabel," and Max Vander Weyde continues his observations on Phillipa's clever doings, the subject of this month's article is the decoration of interiors with rustic work, leaves and grasses. The more serious matter in this issue is represented by "three Letters from Herat." There are several very pretty poems, and a bright story called "Alice and I." The number closes with a full Arm Chair and a readible Book table. The new subscribers are promised some rare inducements, and the old ones find the attractions of the book strong enough to hold their interest. Godey's compares favorably with the best publications of its kind in this or any other country. It aims to be, and certainly is, a Lady's Book par excellence.

JOS. H. SMITH,

MANAGER.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Fine weather this week.

C. A. Smith was in attendence at the state fair last week.

George W. Blodgett, of New York, is visiting his uncle, Mr. E. A. Moyer, of Woodstock.

Albert E. Price, one of Hudson's stock dealers called on us Monday. He and his brother Charles are making quite extensive purchases in this vicinity and expect to continue the business during the remainder of the season.

Oliver Holmes, of New York, is the guest of Mrs. Josiphene Joslyn, of Woodstock.

Elder K. H. Crane spent the fore part of the week visiting friends at Battle Creek, and returns feeling much refreshed by the change and travel.

Messrs. Austin and Saunders, painters, recently finished putting on the finishing touches at Louie Zeph's residence on Lake St. The job does credit to its executors.

The tuition of foreign pupils has been reduced from 40 cents to 25 cts. per week. A movement in the right direction.

Smith's stock and grain scales have just undergone a general overhauling and are now in excellent condition for use.

A new sign hangs from the window of Thomas Bowen's shoe shop, on the west side.

Rumor says that Than. Osborn, of Woodstock, will engage in the sale of agricultural implements at this place during the coming season. The opening is certainly a good one and we know of no better man to fill it than Mr. Osborn.

The "Half a man" talk given at the rink by Prof. Fisk, Saturday evening was well worth the fifteen cents which it cost to hear it. The speaker is well worthy a much larger audience however than the one which listened to him on that occasion; and it is to be hoped our people will be more generous should he consent to speak in the place again.

While the increase of population in our own town is being reported we would not forget to say that a bright eyed little boy claims parental attention at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Cole near Clayton.

The guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Dayton left Tuesday morning to visit friends at Litchfield.

Miss Susie Wyman, of Sycamore Ill., spent Sunday in Toledo with her cousin, Mrs. Emma Schneider.

We understand that Harvey Dayton expects to buy apples in this vicinity to ship to Illinois.

E. M. Brown is on the alert for all the good hay he can hear of, and offers the highest cash price for the same.

A number of prospective winter term teachers are making good use of their time by brightening up with Prof. Tripp at our village schools. An increase in the attendance of foreign pupils is also reported.

Levi Salsbury took the train Tuesday for Grand Rapids where he made a brief stay visiting and sight seeing.

The special freight going east on the M. & O. was delayed a short time last Saturday forenoon by one of the steam heads to the engine being blown out. The matter was soon adjusted however and trains run as usual during the remainder of the day.

Corn cutting has now been commenced in good earnest.

A. J. Hasbrouck's new residence receives its internal plastering this week. Messrs. Terpening and Harrington are the mud stickers employed, which fact is a sufficient guarantee as to quality of the work done.

Al. Maples has a flock of pencil neck brahma chickens, to which he calls the attention of those who admire good poultry.

Both our village Divines are out of town rusticating this week; and unless something like the "special revelation" system used by the Mormons comes to our assistance before going to press, we fear the usual Sunday service announcements will, like other things spiritual be striven for, but not obtained.

Jacob VanEtten, of Wheatland, had his shoulder joint dislocated last Saturday by falling suddenly from a wagon. Dr. E. M. Jenkins readjusted matters and Jake is again about his business, but supports the left hand by a sling.

Rumor says that Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, temperance advocate of Jackson, will visit our town in the near future and give some of her popular and strong talk upon the subject of which she is so notably the master.

ONSTED ODDS.

A special school meeting next Monday evening, to see about electing a Moderator.

Miss Mate Lawton closes her third term of school here Sept. 23rd. She has been very successful.

The Onsted boys defeated the Rome boys by a score of 12 to 14 last Saturday at Rome.

Andy Carson and family, from Homer, moved into the upper part of Mr. Verneir's house last Monday.

Geo. Hines went to Toledo Tuesday as catcher for the Adrian "Phats" in a game against the Toledo Fat Nine.

Undoubtedly we shall soon see the schoolyard fence away, as it was sold at the last meeting for $1. The question arises is it needed or not? If not needed it could be sold, but otherwise we think it illegal to dispose of it.

Dry, dusty and windy.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Fine weather for seeding.

Corn cutting has begun in earnest this week.

Samuel Fletcher has a new blacksmith shop up, and is going to shingle it as fast as possible. It is on south Church street nea[illegible]

The stock holders of t[illegible] telegraph line have been [illegible] new poles about the village, and extending their line.

Mr. E. A. Palmer, of Hillsdale, called on friends last week.

Richard Cadmus spent a few days with John Emmons at Mattawan and took in the state fair at Kalamazoo.

We are glad to welcome back for another year, the smiling countenance of our pastor, Rev. W. J. Clack.

Miss May Ilgenfrits, of Monroe, was the guest of Miss Belle Barlow over Sunday.

Mrs. R. T. Bush left for her home in Brooklyn N. Y. last week in company with her sister, Miss Ella Hall, who will spend the winter with her.

Saxton and Robertson wish to thank the gentlemen for their kind service in getting their engine out of the mill pond last week.

Miss Fannie McNiel, of Milan and Miss Lou. Arner of our village went to Toledo Thursday, after a fall stock of millinery goods and spent the evening with C. T. Bateman and family. Mr. Bateman filled the office of County Supt. of schools in this county, a few years ago.

Miss Lou Arner, having procured the service of Miss McNiel an experienced trimmer, respectfully invites all of her friends to call and examine goods and prices before purchasing elsewhere, and guarantees satisfaction.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

In my Fair week letter, the Band was neglected, but as no better ever came here they can afford to be overlooked once.

Mr. William Stacy died after a brief illness, though his health has not been good for a long time. His funeral was conducted by the Masonic fraternity, Rev. Hills of Napoleon officiating.

Mr. Ide still lingers without hope of recovery, and as sickness multiplies cares, his wife is fortunate in possessing many lady friends who are handy in emergencies. True they don't count for much at the ballot box, unless represented by their husbands or brothers, but you just wait until next Presidential election, and Mrs. Hazlett or Mrs. somebody, will represent the views of a whole political party. Why they can be trusted to engineer business for others, while incompetent to manage their own, is a little queer; and to send women to make stump speeches at such times would seem absurd if they were not faithfully counseled between whiles, to refrain from demoralizing womanhood with common sense and politics. There are sick people enough at present to give their lawful qualifications exercise, and few are in danger of losing their practice of economy while so many branches of industry droop, and laborers destroy each other's chances of employment by cutting down prices and attempting to enforce idleness on a part in order to secure work for themselves. This is a creed of self, that makes working people slaves instead of independent members of society, and neither employers or employees can look upon work with respect, that is performed for a pittance instead of its real worth, and forces some one else to live on taxable charity. The family lacking in unanimity is a sample of the community that poisons its own welfare with catering to the selfishness of a few, and in a great degree destroys the good effect of benefits within reach of all, and those who exact dishonorable competition and persist in employing only those who undermine their fellows, manufacture a scourge under which they writhe, namely, taxation for the support of pauperism in all its forms.

MACON MUSIC.

At the home of the bride's brother, Macon Mich., on Wednesday evening Sept. 16th, Miss Libbie M. Hunter was married to Mr. Fred C. Corden, of Saline. A beautiful moonlight evening greeted those who assembled to witness the marriage service, and extend their good wishes to the young couple. During the ceremony the bride and groom stood under an umbrella of evergreen. The bride was becomingly dressed in golden brown silk, trimed with white lace. After the principal parties began to be addressed as Mr. and Mrs. Corden, refreshments were served. The bridal party took the evening train for Jackson, where they will spend a few days and then go to their home in Saline. Below is a list of the presents received by them.

Pickle castor, silver piece, toilet set, pair vases, set glassware, tinted glass water service, silver teaspoons, silver tablespoons, silver sugar spoon, silver knives and forks, glass finger bowl, linen table cloth, linen towels, turkish towel, 1 dozen stereoscopic views 3 baskets flowers, flower lyre, vase and flowers, glass cake dish, decorative fan, willow rocker, set decorated china, decorated chamber set, silver napkin rings, large cake, deed of lot for home.

On Wednesday evening, Sept. 9th, the spacious residence of Mrs. M. A. Collins, Macon Mich., was filled by a large company of relatives and friends, to witness the marriage of her daughter Allie, to Rev. W. C. Burns, of Fairport, N. Y. Precisely at eight o'clock the bridal pair attended by Miss Lettie and Mr. J. B. Burns as bridesmaid and groomsman, entered the brilliantly lighted parlors and were pronounced husband and wife, in an unusually beautiful and impressive manner by the officiating clergyman, Rev. Dr. Dunn, of Hillsdale College. After the hearty congratulations of the assembled guests, the company sat down to an elegant repast. The presents were so numerous that we have not space to note them singly. A fine upright piano from the bride's mother. An elegant rug from S. W. Anderson & Co., of this village, and a handsomely bound edition of Knight's Half Hours, with best authors, from the bride's cousin, Sumner Collins Esq., of the legal firm of Geo. V. Lothrop & Collins, Detroit, and a beautiful water set from the groom's brother, attracted our especial attention. The bride, Miss Collins, is an honored graduate of the Tecumseh High School, and having always lived in this village and vicinity, is highly esteemed as one of our most pleasant and talented young ladies. Mr. Burns is a graduate of Hillsdale College, and having occupied the pulpit of one of the churches in this vicinity, is favorably known to our citizens. The best wishes and warmest regard of a host of friends follow the young couple to their new home in Fairport, N. Y., where Mr. Burns is pleasantly located as pastor of one of the Baptist churches.

THE LAST DAY OF SUMMER.

T'was ushered in solemn and beautiful. No echoes awoke the still air from its slumbers. Only the faintest, sweetest note from one trembling bird began the prelude to the melancholy autumn. The early sunbeams glided from their couch, and softly kissing the tears from off the flowers, crept around among the quivering shadows, but warned by their ominous frowns did not venture to peer around into their faces and laugh at them. Now and then a brown leaf stole down from its companions and fluttered sadly to the earth, to die and be forgotten.

The melancholy Bean roused her silvery waves, as usual, and tried to smile; then, as if discouraged before the attempt was made, silently flowed on. A soft light seemed to come into the black eyes of the mischievous squirrel, as he stayed not to visit his nut to his companions, but scampered off to his home to eat his meal in silence. The robin was heard talking to his mate in low tones about a home in the South. The bees returned to their cells but half laden. Fragrant flowers drooped their graceful heads and wailed a sad farewell to the branches that had so fondly cherished them. One tiny humming bird, at evening, fluttered around the white buds of the snowberry bush, but finding no sweetness there, flew away, whither we know not. A few bright-winged butterflies vainly wooed the departing love, and then we saw them lying cold as clay.

The sweet summer, with all its charms and pleasures has passed away. Others may come in their season, but this one never, only as Mnemosyne may from time to time withdraw the mystic vail from her charge, and graciously permit us to gaze on her picturesque walls. Other skies may be as blue, other shadows may fall as rich and dark under the grand old trees where the cricket chippers so lonely now; another summertime the sun may go down dreaming in the dim old west, and the clouds may pile up their royal treasures, of purple and gold, and the young moon may climb the eastern hill, leaning on the arm of her dark-eyed sister, and the stars may blossom out in the soft twilight and fade in the dewey morn, but this summer cannot come again. Some soft-winged angel will wave its wand over the sharpness of our pains, and we shall forget the gloom that for a season presided over the wreck of resplendent hopes and swift-winged visions, and when the sweet-sounding cymbals of another summer shall wake the village flowers from their icy bed, a spirit that can come from no other place than Paradise will hover over the valley of shadows with merciful smiles, and temper with serenity the glory of the scene.—Addison Courier.

Cassell's Family Magazine for October.

The Editor of Cassell's Family Magazine is a good caterer for he knows how to make a tempting feast. His aim seems to be variety and variety in a magazine is a most desirable quality. In the October number the interesting serial "A Diamond in the Rough" opens the feast and is followed by a well written and sensible article on tricycling for women, an exercise that cannot be too highly recommended. English women, who are ahead of us in all out-of-door sports, are famous tricyclists. They have clubs in almost every town and make extended pilgrimages over the country. An article on the fruit districts of Kent, England, is filled with interesting information and the Paris letter maintains its place as a standard on the important subject of dress. Music, poetry and pictures enliven the number, and "The Gatherer" gives a world of information about labor saving inventions.—Cassell & Company, $1.50 a year in advance.

The Magazine of American History for October will contain the fac-simile of an important autograph letter of General Grant (never before published), on the character of Alexander H. Stevens, Vice-President of the Confederacy.

OUR DEAD PRESIDENTS.

How They Died and Where They Were Buried.

A Short Account of the Last Days and Hours of the Country's Chief Magistrates—The Remarkable Fortitude Exhibited by the Illustrious Sufferers.

General Washington, the first President, took cold during a fifteen hours' ride over his plantation on the 13th of December, 1799, during two last hours of which he was exposed to a severe storm of snow, hail and rain. The cold developed on the 14th, and he died of pneumonia on the 15th. A few minutes before his death he asked his Secretary to have his body kept three days before burial. The Secretary bowed. "Do you understand me?" the dying man asked. "Yes," was the reply. "'Tis well," Washington said. They were his last words. The body was placed on the 18th, a schooner being stationed off Alexandria to fire minute guns while the procession moved from the house to the vault. The troops, horse and foot, led the way; then came four of the clergy, then Washington's horse with his saddle, holsters, and pistols, led by two grooms in livery; then the body, borne by the Masonic order (of which he was member), and officers, followed by the family and several old friends and the corporation of Alexandria. At the vault Rev. Mr. Davis read the service and delivered a brief address, after which the body was deposited in the vault with Masonic ceremonies. Washington's remains were deposited in their present receptacle in Mount Vernon in 1837.

John Adams, the second President, died on July 4, 1826, the semi-centennial of American independence. Adams, as everyone possessed a remarkable activity of mind though his sight was so impaired that he could neither read nor write. By April, 1826, it was evident that he was failing, though his neighbors in Quincy, Mass., hoped fondly that he would be able to attend the local Fourth of July celebration. When, however, it became apparent that he could not attend in person a delegate was appointed to visit him and beg a last word for cheerful messages. On June 30 the delegate called on Mr. Adams and spent some few minutes with him in conversation, and took from him a toast to be presented on the Fourth of July as coming from him. "I will give you," said he, "Independence Forever." He was asked if he would not add anything to it, and he replied, "Not a word." At this time Mr. Adams experienced no suffering, but respiration became more and more difficult till on the morning of the 4th. He passed away calmly and without suffering at sunset. "Thomas Jefferson still survives," were the last words he uttered, so far as could be gathered from his faltering articulation. He was buried in the family vault in the cemetery, but upon the completion of the Unitarian Church of Quincy, just across the street, in 1828, the body was removed from the vault into the room beneath the church.

Thomas Jefferson, the third President, died only a few hours before John Adams. On the 3d of July he dozed hour after hour under the influence of opiates. Rousing occasionally, he fervently expressed a desire to live until the day he had assisted to consecrate fifty years before. At eleven o'clock at night he whispered to Mr. N. P. Trist, his grandchild's husband, who sat by the bed: "This is the Fourth?" Mr. Trist remained silent, being unable to say "Not yet." "This is the Fourth?" again whispered Jefferson, and when the watcher nodded, "Ah!" he sighed, and sunk into sleep with an expression of satisfaction upon his countenance. His watchers thought him dying, but he lingered until 12:40 in the afternoon, occasionally indicating a desire by words or looks. "I resign my soul to God and my daughter to my country" is a popular version of his last utterances. His remains lie in a little inclosure to the right of a road leading from Charlottesville, Va., to Monticello. An obelisk nine feet high marks the spot.

James Madison, the fourth President, and the last survivor of the signers of the United States Constitution, died on June 28, 1836. During his last illness, when the family and doctor were at dinner, his voice was heard feebly from the adjoining chamber: "Doctor, are you pushing about the bottles? Do your duty, doctor, or I must cashier you." He is buried at Montpelier, four miles from Orange Court House, Va. The grave is in the center of a large field, in a lot about one hundred feet square, surrounded by a brick wall. On the gate is a sign: "Madison, 1830."

James Monroe, the fifth President and the third to die on Independence Day, died July 4, 1831, in New York City, at the residence of his son-in-law, Samuel L. Governeur. His remains were deposited with public honors in the Marble Cemetery on Second Street, in New York, where they reposed until 1858, when they were removed under the escort of the Seventh Regiment, then commanded by Colonel Abram Duryea, to Hollywood Cemetery at Richmond, Va. The remains rest on a beautiful site overlooking the James River Falls above Richmond, in a vault of brick and granite.

John Quincy Adams, the sixth President, was found by death where he would have wished its approach—in the halls of Congress. On February 21, 1848, he ascended the steps of the Capitol with his accustomed alacrity, and took his place in the House. While petitions were being presented, suddenly there was a cry of "Mr. Adams!" and a rush of members toward his seat. He was rising with a number of petitions in his hand, when he was struck with paralysis and sank down, catching at his desk and falling into the arms of the member who sprang across the aisle to his assistance. He was carried into the rotunda, then into the Speaker's room. He attempted to speak, but his voice was a mere murmur, low and indistinct, though Mr. Ashmun, who was placing him on the sofa, heard him say: "This is the last of earth; I am content." He became insensible at once, and lingered, faintly breathing, till ten o'clock on the morning of the 23d, when he expired. Mr. Adams' body was removed on the car drawn by six white horses that had served for Harrison's funeral, and after lying in state in Faneuil Hall, Boston, was buried under the Unitarian church at Quincy, Mass., where his father, John Adams, was buried.

Andrew Jackson, the seventh President, died on Sunday, June 8, 1845, at the Hermitage, his famous home. For months he had been suffering from disease of the lungs, dropsy and diarrhœa. On the Friday previous to his death he gave directions concerning his funeral, and dictated a letter, his last, to the President, bidding him act promptly and resolutely in the affairs of Texas and Oregon. On the morning of his death, a brilliant, hot day, he bade farewell to his family, friends and servants, whom he addressed with calmness, strength, and even admiration on the subject of religion, concluding: "I hope and trust to meet you all in Heaven, both white and black," words he repeated again in the afternoon as the end was coming on. Hearing the servants on the piazza weeping, he spoke again: "What is the matter with my dear children? Have I alarmed you? O, do not cry. Be good children and we will meet in Heaven. At six he died, without a struggle or a pang. His funeral was attended by 3,000 people on the Tuesday following. He is buried at the Hermitage, on the Lebanon pike, eleven miles from Nashville, Tenn. A massive monument of Tennessee granite marks his grave.

Martin Van Buren, the eighth President, died at Kinderhook, Columbia County, N. Y., on July 24, 1862, of asthma, that developed into a painful catarrhal affection of the throat and lungs. One of his last distinct utterances was to his clergyman: "There is but one refuge." He is buried in the little village cemetery at Kinderhook, in the family lot. A granite shaft fifteen feet high marks his grave.

William Henry Harrison, the ninth President, died in Washington City, April 4, 1841. He rode on horseback to his inauguration and stood bareheaded and without an overcoat to deliver his inaugural, contracting pneumonia, which was aggravated by subsequent imprudences. His last words heard by Dr. Washington were: "Sir, I wish you to understand the true principles of the Government. I wish them carried out. I ask nothing more." A procession two miles in length escorted the body, which was conveyed on a funeral car drawn by six white horses, to its temporary resting place in the Congressional burying ground, where the Episcopal service was read by Mr. Hawley. His present resting place is at North Bend, Ohio, a few yards from the track of the Illinois Central Railroad, where it enters the tunnel. The grave is a simple mound, unfenced, on a little knoll, and is shaded by beeches and other trees. There is no monument and no inscription any where to tell the story of the departed hero of Tippecanoe.

John Tyler, the tenth President, was taken ill on Sunday, January 12, 1862, while at breakfast at the Ballard House, Richmond, Va., and died at midnight on the 17th. "Let me give you some stimulant," said the doctor. "I will not have it," replied the dying man; and closing his eyes he passed away. His body lay in state at the Capitol. He was a member of the Confederate Congress, and was interred at Hollywood Cemetery on the 21st, by Bishop Johns. His grave is a little mound covered with bushes, about ten yards from the grave of Monroe.

James K. Polk, the eleventh President, died at Nashville, Tenn., June 15, 1849, three months after his retirement from the Presidency. He had suffered from diarrhœa on the journey home, and a recurring attack proved fatal. On his death bed he received the rite of baptism at the hands of a Methodist clergyman. He is buried at the old family homestead at Nashville, Tenn. The monument is a block twelve feet square by twelve in height.

General Zachary Taylor, the twelfth President, attended the Fourth of July ceremonial in Washington City in 1850, when the dust from Kosciusko's tomb was deposited in the Washington monument, and endured for several hours the heat of the day, which he declared was worse than any he had experienced in Mexico or Florida. Going home, he insisted on eating freely of unripe cherries and drinking cold water and iced milk, despite the remonstrances of his servant. This brought on an attack of cholera morbus, followed by typhoid, of which he died on the 9th. An imposing procession accompanied his remains to the Congressional Cemetery. His remains have been removed three times, and now repose in a public spot at Frankfort, Ky.

Millard Fillmore, the thirteenth President, died at Buffalo, N. Y., N. Y., on March 8, 1874, and after lying in state at St. Paul's Cathedral, the remains were buried at Forest Lawn Cemetery, three miles from Buffalo. A tall monument bears the inscription: "Millard Fillmore. Born Jan. 7, 1800; died March 8, 1874."

Franklin Pierce, the fourteenth President, died on Friday, October 8, 1869, at the residence of Mr. Willard Williams, Concord, N. H., of dropsy and inflammation of the stomach. For the last three days of his life he was nearly unconscious, and died without pain. His body lay in state at Doric Hall and was buried in the Minot Cemetery, on Main Street, on the 11th. The Pierce lot is at the northwest corner of the old cemetery, and contains about an acre of ground. It is surmounted by a neat iron fence six feet high. The monument is of Italian marble, surmounted by a draped cross, and its total height is fourteen feet eight inches.

James Buchanan, the fifteenth President, died at Wheatland, near Lancaster, Pa., on June 1, 1868, after an illness of one month. On the night before his death he gave detailed directions for his funeral and the erection of his monument, dictating the inscription, a blank to be left for the date of death, "which cannot be distant," he said. His last authentic words, as he sank into the sleep in which he died, were: "O, Lord God Almighty, as Thou wilt." His funeral took place on the 4th, the exercises being conducted by Dr. Nevin, President of Franklin and Marshall College, an immense concourse being present. He is buried at Woodward Hill cemetery, Lancaster, on the banks of the Conestoga. The lot is enclosed by a neat iron fence. All around the fence is a hedge of blooming roses, and rose bushes are planted in the enclosure. A fine sarcophagus of Italian marble marks the grave.

Abraham Lincoln, the sixteenth President, died by the hand of John Wilkes Booth, in Washington, April 15, 1865. Nine of the persons supposed to be implicated suffered condign punishment. The funeral honors paid to the deceased Chief Magistrate, were of the most elaborate character. His remains are buried at Oak Ridge Cemetery, Springfield, Ill. A fine pile of marble, granite and bronze marks the spot. It bears the single word, "Lincoln."

Andrew Johnson, the seventeenth President, died suddenly at Greenville, Tenn., on Saturday, July 31, 1875, and was buried with Masonic ceremonies on the 3d of August. His grave is at Greenville, Tenn., on a spot selected by himself. The monument is of marble, upon a base of granite, nine and a half by seven feet. The tomb was erected by the President's three surviving sons.

James A. Garfield, the twentieth President, was assassinated in the Baltimore and Potomac railroad depot in Washington city, on July 2, 1881, by Charles Guiteau, and died of his wound September 19, at Elberon, near Long Branch, N. J. Funeral services took place in Washington on Friday, September 23, and the remains were then transferred to Cleveland, Ohio, where they were entombed September 26. A handsome mausoleum for their reception is now in course of erection at Cleveland.

General Grant, the eighteenth President, died at Mt. McGregor, N. Y., July 23, 1885. The details of the death and magnificent funeral of the great soldier are still fresh in the minds of all.—Baltimore Sun.

CHINESE EXPORT TRADE.

How It is Controlled by Mongolian Merchants!

The export trade of the Pacific coast with China, which a few years ago was controlled by white merchants, is now practically in the hands of the Chinese, whose facilities have increased with their growing knowledge of trade in this country. White men who now figure in our commercial relations with the Flowery Kingdom are in many cases acting only as agents of Chinese firms or individuals. The manifests of all the shipments from this port to China for the quarter ended June 30, 1885, furnish a fair picture of the present condition of the export trade. The total merchandise shipments to China by white houses for the quarter appear to have been $281,273.49. This includes all shipments from the east, as embraced in the exports, nominally, by the two China steamship lines or their agents, which together exported merchandise valued at $163,901.57. The great part, in fact, nearly all of the shipments nominally by the steamship lines are outside of Californian production, the bulk being sheetings, ginseng, and arms and ammunition. The remainder of the $281,273.49, or $117,371.92, must be reduced by deducting shipments by white persons who nominally ship for themselves, but who are known to other shippers as agents for Chinese, to the amount of $43,357.81. This leaves the statement for merchandise exports for the quarter named as follows: Direct by Chinese: $541,915.74; by white agents of Chinese, $43,357.81; total, $585,273.57. The merchandise exports by whites are as follows: By transportation companies, $163,901.57; by local business houses, $74,014.11; total: $237,915.68. This shows the Chinese to have had control of about three-fourths of the business for the quarter. During the quarter Chinese business houses sent out of the country treasure amounting to $913,-[illegible] to Hong Kong. The banks of California, Anglo-Californian Bank, and Hong Kong and Shanghai banking corporation also sent to Hong Kong over $2,000,000. The largest item of export is flour, and the flour trade between this port and China is generally known to be controlled by the Chinese. Some authorities state that ninety per cent. of the export trade hence to Chinese ports is controlled by the Chinese merchants. This condition of affairs tends to show that the local trade of Chinatown is only a small part of the Chinese question, and the ease with which the Chinese absorb business has made them masters of the situation, so far as the export trade with their country is concerned.—San Francisco Chronicle.

PARTINGTON AT HOME.

B. P. Shillaber, the Aged Humorist, as He is Seen at Chelsea, Mass.

"I never call a man old until he gets to be an octagon or a centurion," said B. P. Shillaber (Mrs. Partington) to a friend who was congratulating him upon having that day reached the good age of seventy.

"Unless it should be foreordained beforehand in advance," playfully rejoined his friend, "that he should survive his faculties and become idiomatic before that time."

The genial humorist was seated in his favorite room, which in these later years has contained him for months at a time. But few of his many callers would dream of this fact. The ever hearty welcome which they receive and the absence of any personal complaining certainly do not hint of the severe pain which is a frequent visitor. Only the crutch in the corner suggests it. There looked out from the painting on the wall the roguish face of Ike, "the prodigal of virtue," the very same Ike who caused Mrs. Partington to wonder why he "didn't get a medal, for certainly a more meddlesome boy she never knew," although, at the same time, she dared to hope that with judicial training he might yet become a useful membrane of society." On the shelf below the painting was Sidney Morse's fine statuette of the humorist. The writing-desk, which had done him faithful service for fully twenty-five years, stood opposite.

Over the writing-desk, on a bookshelf, were what he called his three essentials—a large Polyglot Bible, which had an interesting family history, a Shakspeare and a Webster's Dictionary. There was a twinkle in his eye when he remarked that through these he showed his loyalty to the "angular Saxons." Upon being asked where his own books were, he naively replied that he "kept them in another room out of sight." Speaking of these, it is pleasant to know that the first copy of each one of them he inscribed to the one who for forty-five years was a true and loving helpmeet, whom death claimed some two years since, leaving him alone but for the bright, helpful presence of an unmarried daughter, who has now the sole charge of his house, and is a daily elixir which any man might envy.

Unfortunately, Mr. Shillaber is not as "rich as Creosote" and never has been. He has longed "to have a villa in the country and become an amatory farmer under the canister of heaven." But he has surely illustrated, in his life and in his works, a quality of mind which not even Crœsus' money could buy, that "it is better to speak paregorically of a person than to be all the time flinging epitaphs at him."

In the confinement which is now more or less his he is ever interested in the outside world. His interest in politics is as fresh as when he was a young man, before he "inherited the gout from his wife's ancestors." He is rooted and grounded in the principle of a true Democracy. The Boston Post, which first introduced him as Mrs. Partington, is still a welcome daily visitor. But in talking with him on political matters no one can help thinking of poor Paul, the corporal of the Bloody 7th, "who was inclined to politics, but wasn't a propergander nor an oily arch st, nor an averitionist, nor a demigod; all he wanted was an exercise of of his sufferings and the use of his elective French eyes."

Mr. Shillaber's interest in his friends is frequently shown in the apt impromptus which unexpectedly greet them. As an instance, with a copy of Browning's "Agamemnon and Dramatic Idyls," which, one Christmas time, he sent as a present, he wrote on the fly-leaf:

"A Merry Christmas, I send with this,
Though it seems absurd to crowning
To wish for each nutory bliss
Over the works of Browning.

The many rhymes of his, which have added pleasure to festive occasions, are growing fewer and fewer, and in his home in Chelsea his thoughts turn oftener than formerly to the unknown country. As he says himself, he is now living on borrowed time.—Chelsea (Mass.) Cor. Philadelphia Press.

THE AIR.

Whether It Be Colorless Depending Upon Environment.

The Challenger has dredged from the bottom of the ocean fishes which live habitually at great depths, and whose enormous eyes tell of the correspondingly faint light which must have descended to them through the seemingly transparent water. It will not be as futile a speculation as may at first seem, to put ourselves in imagination in the condition of creatures under the sea, and ask what the sun may appear to be to them: for, if the fish who had never risen above the ocean-floor were an intelligent being, might he not plausibly reason that the dim greenish light of his heaven, which is all he has ever known—was the full splendor of the sun shining through a medium which all his experience shows is transparent?

We ourselves are, in very fact, living at the floor of a great aerial sea, whose billows roll hundreds of miles above our heads. Is it not at any rate conceivable that we may have been led into a like fallacy from judging only by what we see at the bottom? May we not, that is, have been led into the fallacy of assuming that the intervening medium above us is colorless because the light which comes through it is so?

I freely admit that all men, educated or ignorant, appear to have the evidence of their senses that the air is colorless, and that pure sunlight is white, so that if I venture to ask you to listen to considerations which have lately been brought forward to show that it is the sun which is blue, and the air really acts like an orange veil or like a sieve which picks out the blue and leaves the white, I do so in the confidence that I may appeal to you on other grounds than those I could submit to the primitive man who has his senses alone to trust to: for the educated intelligence possesses those senses equally, and in addition the ability to interpret them by the light of reason, and before this audience it is to that interpretation that I address myself.—*S. CONCERNING JOCKEYS.

The Habits and Training of Successful Riders.

"Yes, I earn a good deal of money every season, but I have to work hard for it, and I think I am deserving of all I get. A jockey, in order to be successful, must constantly subject himself to a rigorous course of training, and, although people who are not-posted on such matters would hardly think it, the best riders in the country—men who earn from $5,000 to $10,000 every summer—frequently go to bed hungry every night for weeks."

"Why is that?"

"Well, it is this way: The scale of weights in this country is very light as compared with that in England, and so it is always the case that by the time a jockey becomes a man in years he has grown to such a size that his natural bodily weight is far above that which the racing rules prescribe shall be carried in all the more important events for 2 and 3 year old runners. Of course this scale of weights must be adhered to, and it is for this reason that every jockey is weighed before each race begins in order that none of them may be either over or under the weight which the rules fix for that particular event. In winter, for instance, my weight is about 135 pounds, yet during the racing season I must be prepared to ride at a moment's notice any race where but 110 pounds is allowed to be carried. This means that I have got to take off by artificial means about fifteen pounds of surplus flesh; and you can have no idea of how hard it is to do that, and then to keep my weight down to the proper figure.

"How is this accomplished?"

"By sweating. In spite of all the care which can be taken as to what is eaten a jockey finds that he is constantly getting four or five pounds heavier than he should be, and this means that each morning of the day he is to ride a race he must get up early, put on a number of sweaters, and over these place heavy clothes. Then comes a stiff walk of four or five miles, the pace being fast enough so that perspiration will be freely induced; and by dint of hard walking and eating little or nothing during the fore part of the day he finds that by afternoon he is down to the proper weight and can ride. Of course this sort of life weakens a man. If it were only done for a week or so it would not make so much difference but where one has to keep constantly reducing his flesh by artificial means from the 1st of May until the 1st of October it is a tremendous strain on the mental and nervous system as well as the physical. There is a constant feeling of weakness and sickness which never leaves one except during sleep."

"What does a jockey eat during the racing season?"

"Well, I don't know how other men manage, but I find that fruit is about the only thing I can eat without causing my weight to run up beyond proper limits. Of course there is not much strength in that sort of diet, and I have to supplement it with meat once in a while, but even then I can only have a small piece of very rare steak, and this with a little toast is quite a feast for a jockey who is in active training."

"So you are hungry a good deal of the time?"

"Yes," said Murphy, with a curious smile as he looked up into the face of his questioner, the high cheek bones with the skin drawn tightly over them telling their own story of self-imposed starvation. "We don't know what it is to feel that we have eaten enough from the day the racing season begins until it is over. And then the work is hard and of a kind which makes a man want nourishing food. You get on the back of a big, active thoroughbred race-horse that is full of life and ambition, and sometimes is vicious besides, and you are expected to control him and ride him in such a manner that his best speed will be obtained for a long distance, and all the time you are actually weak for want of food."—Chicago Tribune.

A Rich Islander.

The business of this little cluster of islands which lie in the Pacific Ocean just off the southwest coast of Patagonia is sheep-raising and selling, and is nearly all in the hands of one man, Mr. Kerr by name, who is the Governor. He went there many years ago a poor man, and is now worth more than $5,000,000. There are no bushes or trees of any kind on the islands, and the entire surface is covered with a bed of peat many feet thick and of good quality. There is sufficient fuel to supply the world for an indefinite length of time. Covering the peat is a thick growth of short, but very nutritious, grass, upon which the sheep thrive wonderfully well. The number of sheep on the islands is about 400,000. These islands are very high, the hills rising many hundreds of feet, and are covered with points of sharp rocks that sometimes rise 200 or 300 feet above the surface of the peat. It rains nearly every day in the year, and as the peat is water soaked the water stands in pools everywhere. It seems to be unable to run down the hills, and the hill-tops are nearly as wet as the valleys.—Cor. N. Y. Herald.

—"The case of William Brennan is a remarkable one," says the New Haven Register. "For the past five years he has been totally blind. He was a peddler of notions, and he and the little boy that led him from door to door were familiar figures on our streets. Last Thursday, while walking in the strong sunlight, his vision suddenly returned in a measure to him. He could see. The world that had been so long shut out from his gaze is his again to look upon. His eyes, which were for so many years of no use to him, are now believed to be rapidly becoming strong again."

SCHOOLMASTERS.

How They Enjoyed Their Positions in the Olden Time.

Schoolmasters have always had a reputation for severity, and have excelled in the use of the cane. In fact, flogging seems to have formed a part of the system of training in force at public schools. The great reformer, Erasmus, remarks Archdeacon Farrar, has left us a painfully graphic account of how he saw a poor boy at St. Paul's cruelly beaten by a grave and reverend divine for no fault whatever, but merely to show him the discipline of English boys. And so for centuries the bad custom of cruel education continued. It was for the purpose of securing milder treatment of children at school that Roger Asham wrote his celebrated work on "The Schoolmaster," but it does not seem to have effected any reform, for beating was thought the best way of reducing a boy into proper form or shape. At the end of the eighteenth century Southey was expelled from Westminster school because he had boldly denounced the system of flogging, contending that it proceeded from the devil. Even more brutality was exhibited at St. Paul's school during the present century. Sergeant Ballatine was a day scholar at this school, and he has written a graphic account of his masters, who were all tyrants—cruel, cold-blooded, unsympathetic tyrants. "Armed with a cane," he says, "and surrounded by a halo of terror, they sat at their respective desks. Under Durham the smaller boys trembled. Edwards took the next in age. Each flogged continuously. The former, a somewhat obese personage, with a face as if cut out of a suet pudding, was solemn in the performance of this, his favorite occupation. Rev. Mr. Edwards, on the contrary, though a cadaverous-looking object, was quite funny over the tortures he inflicted. * * * One of the favorite modes of inflicting pain adopted by these tyrants was, when the boys came in on a winter's morning, shivering and gloveless, to strike them violently with the cane over the tips of the fingers. I nearly learned at that school the passion of hatred, and should probably have done so but that my mind was too fully occupied by terror. Bean was a short, podgy, pompous man, with insignificant features. His mode of correction was different in form, and I can see him now, with flushed, angry face, lashing some little culprit over back and shoulders until his own arm gave way under the exertion. Among the amusements of this gentleman, one was to throw a book—generally 'Entick's Dictionary,' if I remember rightly—at the head of any boy who indulged in a yawn, and if he succeeded in his aim and produced a reasonable contusion he was in good humor for the rest of the day. I have met them all three since my school days, and found them shallow and ignorant, no doubt with plenty of Greek and Latin in their heads, but without knowledge of human nature or power of appreciating the different dispositions of their pupils.—All the Year Round.

FISHING AT SAN BLAS.

Some of the Queer Tricks Employed by the Natives.

San Blas is a seaside city on the Pacific coast of the Mexican State Jalisco. The old town of San Blas is three-quarters of a mile from the new site, and is situated on the summit of an isolated rock about two hundred feet high. This rock, rising out of marshes, is inaccessible on three sides. The northern side has been cut away, and a winding path leads to the top. This road is closely lined with a dense forest of cocoa, banana, plantain and other tropical trees, together with a thick undergrowth of flowering plants and vines, closely netted. The bold, rocky mass presents a picturesque appearance. The summit is only about five hundred yards square, and was formerly occupied by the town, but owing to the unhealthiness of the location it has been deserted, and the business of the town is now transacted at the playa or beach, where the landing is.

The whitefish caught on that coast are delicious, as are also the bagres. The natives do not use hooks, seines, or nets in their fishing. The process of capturing the fish is thus described by United States Consul Lambert:

"The novel method of catching fish in this vicinity may not be instructive, but it will doubtless prove interesting. There is a small shrub growing wild here called 'varbasco.' The native fishermen procure the fibrous root of this shrub, and after mangling it well place it in the bottoms of their canoes. At high tide they proceed to the mouths of the esteros and drive down a wicker fence. They then partly fill their canoes with water, which produces an intensely white liquid from contact with the root. Arriving at the source of the estero, or some shoal place beyond which the fish are not likely to go, they throw this preparation broadcast into the water, which also turns white. The effect is that the fish become blinded, and in a very short time, upon the return of the boat, they are found floating on the surface of the water at the fence erected at the mouth of the estero. The larger ones are then gathered into the boat and taken to market.

"Another method, more fatal, but performed less frequently, is in the use of the milk of the 'ava' tree. This tree yields, when tapped, a white liquid very much resembling the juice of the India-rubber tree. It is used similiary to the varbasco, and blinds as well as kills the fish instantly. Fish killed by the 'leche de ava' have to be used immediately. In neither case is there any visible sign of how they were killed.

"There is a law in existence against the use of poisons in procuring fish for market, but it is practically inoperative and void, for the reason that there is no defined method for determining the death of fishes by those liquids; and, besides, the natives who bring them take good care that each fish shows a spear hold in his back before arrival.

"In the absence of any method of detection, the spear hold is prima-facie evidence that they were not poisoned. No bad effects from eating fish killed in this way appear to be known so far as I can ascertain."—Two Republics.

THE BUSINESS SITUATION

The wheat crop is ample for all demands, both home and foreign.

The corn crop is one of the best we have ever had.

The hay crop is both of large quantity and fine quality.

All the staple vegetables and fruits are so plenty as to insure low prices and cheap living all the next winter.

The iron industry is in good shape and idle mills have very generally resumed work.

Everything that enters into the consumption of daily life is cheap.

Business generally, as evidenced by the decreased number and volume of mercantile failures, is improving.

Rates of interest are cheap, and the cessation of great speculative movements that tempted capital by offers of excessive interest have left an ample supply of funds for legitimate uses.

The reduced values of merchandise and raw materials make it possible for men of limited capital to do business without having to call on lenders for additional means.

The experience of nine-tenths of all the business men in the city is that the revival of the two previous months is being well sustained throughout September.

All leading houses in Cincinnati report an excellent fall trade. Railroad investments that have in them any intrinsic value are being sought for by investors, and the market therefore shows a healthy tone.

All these facts go to show that we are surely recovering from the trade depressions in which the beginning of this year found the whole country involved.

It is time for men to speak cheerfully one to another, and congratulate each other that better days have come.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A WORD FOR HOPE COLLEGE

MR. EDITOR:—As this is the time of year when parents are deciding where to send their sons and daughters to pursue the higher branches of learning, I thought it might not be out of place to call the attention of your readers to Hope College, at Holland, in this State.

This institution offers many advantages to those who wish to secure, at a small cost, a good and thoroughly liberal education.

Holland is a beautiful city of about [illegible] inhabitants, situated twenty-five miles south-west of Grand Rapids and six miles from the shore of Lake Michigan. A five hours ride over the M. & O. R. R. through a fine country, brings you to this town of Dutch name, and of Dutch founding, but of thoroughly American enterprise.

Here you can enjoy frequently the health-giving breezes of the great lake and in summer a short hours ride on a steamer takes you to Macatawa Park on its shores, a beautiful summer resort of growing popularity. The college has a delightful location at one side of the town. Its buildings are at present four, one recently burned. Preparations are being made to erect a large hall for general recitation purposes. The faculty consists of seven professors and one tutor. The regular college classical course with elective courses for those who wish, meets the wants of different classes of students. The institution has always been noted for the thoroughness of its work. Temptations to idleness and opportunities for shirking work are much less frequent than at larger institutions. The moral tone of the College has always been excellent. A large proportion of the students become professing Christians before leaving its walls. Good board can be secured in private families at moderate rates. The college tuition is barely enough to cover incidental expenses. Both sexes are admitted to grammar school and college proper.

Further information may be obtained from the president, Rev. Prof. Charles Scott, D. D., Holland, Mich. A visit to the College and an inspection of its work will satisfy parents that it is a good and safe school for their sons and daughters.

IN DEFENSE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

EDITOR HERALD:

In your last issue I notice the following clipping and editorial comment.

"During the past year about $2,000,000 have been contributed by the English people for the benefit of the heathen and sent to foreign lands. If the revelations of the Pall Mall Gazette are to be believed, a large sum of money might be well spent in missionary work at home.—Exchange."

Yes, that is about the way things work everywhere. Churches make strenuous efforts to raise large sums of money for the benefit of distant heathen, and people who contribute to this way, salve their consciences, in this way, when a small sum of money judiciously spent would alleviate distress and suppressing vice, at home, would do a vastly greater amount of good. The old adage that charity begins at home is always true and everywhere applicable.

Allow me to suggest that this is misleading. It intimates that that portion of Christian people who are sufficiently interested in world evangelization to contribute of their money to forward it, are utterly careless of the moral and material welfare of the communities in which they live. It also intimates that contributors to the cause of Foreign Missions make that act an offset against their indifference for the cause of righteousness at home, in a word to quiet their justly remonstrating consciences. If these intimations are true, it follows that Foreign Mission contributors are both narrow in their views of life, and hypocritical in the extreme, that they connive at social and other sins for silence and inactivity in such cases are contrivance, and that they are so hard hearted that the presence of sin and suffering does not effect them.

Now Mr. Editor, are these the characteristics of the advocates of, and contributors to, the cause of Foreign Missions whom you chance to know?

So far as my acquaintance with them would indicate, they are quite the contrary. Their sympathies are as broad as the world. They are the foremost in every reform. Upon no hearts does the cause of God and humanity at home rest so heavily as upon theirs. Should you wish money or service for the alleviation of the sick, for the advancement of the Temperance Reform, or for the support of charitable or religious institutions in your own community, you would approach the Foreign Mission worker with perfect confidence, knowing inability alone would prompt him to refuse your solicitation. Now Mr. Editor, Is it not a general fact that people who object to the work of World Evangelization in the spirit and insinuation of your editorial, are the very people who object to almost every benevolent cause that appeals to them for material assistance? In other words, is there any good reason for believing that the "Exchange" which sneers at English zeal for "the heathen" has done or is doing anything of importance "in missionary work at home?" In short is not "Exchange" croaking?

CULL.

Tecumseh, Sept. 21, 1885.

The City Collective Exhibits.

One of the principal features of the American Exposition, at New Orleans, will be the city collective exhibits. This plan met with instant approval, and assurances have been received that the display will reflect great credit upon the enterprising cities of the United States. Appreciating the importance of the Exposition and the value of representation where the cities of the country are expected, Chicago has already secured 40,000 square feet of space in the territory, in the Main building, devoted to the collective city exhibition. The City of New Orleans applied for 40,000, but has been persuaded to accept 25,000 feet. The famous city of Pullman has 15,000 feet of space. Indications point to immense displays from the large cities of the East and West. The live cities of the South are exerting themselves to make magnificent displays, they being fully awake to the splendid opportunity for a practical presentation of their commercial advantages to the world.

With steam transportation to the grounds over a double track, steel railway; with a magnificent carriage drive, and with five lines of street railway, as well as river transportation, the large crowds attracted to New Orleans by the various vital interests presented, will be furnished unrivalled facilities for comfort in visiting the American Exposition.

The Popular Science Monthly for October, 1885.

An article of curious interest, and very instructive withal, on comets, by President A. D. White, leads in the October "Popular Science Monthly." It is a history of the strange beliefs and speculations that have been entertained in different ages respecting the nature and import of comets, and the history constitutes a most striking chapter in the warfare of science with ignorance and superstition. The paper shows immense research. The second article is entitled "The White Ant: A Theory," and is by that lucid thinker and happy writer Professor Henry Drummond, author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." The paper is long, beautifully illustrated, charmingly written, and full of new information concerning an extraordinary creature, and especially the wonderful part it plays in the economy of Nature. "The Early Study of Plants," by Miss Eliza A. Youmans, is an extremely valuable contribution to the science of primary education. There are a likeness and biographical sketch of Professor H. A. Newton, and an editorial discussion of "Official Science at Washington." The minor departments are full and varied as usual. New York: D. Appleton & Company. Fifty cents a number, $5 a year.

The state fair receipts at Kalamazoo this week were $12,278.65, and the number of visitors is estimated to have been 54,000. The fair was a success as a show, but such a failure financially that the society will scarcely be able to pay the premiums. So many good fairs about the state nowadays, that such a result is not surprising.

It will be well for the cities of Michigan to pay more particular attention to the condition of their sidewalks. A law goes into effect at the close of to-day making the corporations liable to damage resulting from defective sidewalks. The business of building and repairing sidewalks should be brisk in this city for some time to come, or else suits against the city are likely to be plenty.—Adrian Times.

Standard Time or Solar Time.

The Standard time so called in Michigan is the time by which railroads here are run between Buffalo and Chicago. It was got up entirely and solely for railroad use, and is valuable only for that purpose. When used or attempted to be used as a statute time across the whole state of Michigan for all other business, it becomes an absurdity and a folly. What could be the sense of the people of Michigan getting up in the morning or going to bed at night, or taking their meals, &c., by a time which would be natural only for a longitude west of Chicago. There are variations enough in solar time in all parts of Michigan. We have to keep our clocks and watches by mean or average solar time. There are only 4 days in a year when the sun is due south at 12 noon; that is April 15, June 15, Aug. 28, and Dec. 25. From Dec. 25 to April 15, the sun is slow; from April 15 to June 15, the sun is fast; from June 15 to about Aug. 28, the sun is slow; from that time to Dec. 25, the sun is fast. About Feb. 10, the sun is slow about 14 minutes; about May 1, the sun is fast about 4 minutes; about Nov. 1, the sun is slow about 16 minutes. The sun does not travel in a circle, but in an elipse having two foci of unequal distances from its center.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT., 24, 1885.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Beautiful weather for the County fair this week.

Ed. Hollister returned Tuesday evening from Cincinnati, Ohio, where he has been attending the carnival of the "Order of Cincinnatus" held there last week.

The wicked young men of Holloway go hunting on Sunday; and the worst feature of it is that they bang away so near the church during divine services, as to seriously disturb the slumbers of the parishoners.

Fred H. Gray, an old Tecumseh boy, but now of Milwaukee, Wis., was in town last Saturday. Fred is now a member of the printing fraternity and is "holding cases" in the office of the Evening Wisconsin of that city.

Mrs. Judge Stacy gave a tea party last Friday evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Bacon, of Toledo, and a few of their Tecumseh acquaintances. A very pleasant evening was enjoyed by the participants.

The 50th anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Wimple's wedded life occured last Saturday and a pleasant little company of relatives and friends gathered at their residence in the evening to help celebrate the event.

The state fair last week at Kalamazoo was one of the finest exhibitions ever held in the state, but the attendance was small, and the receipts will be insufficient to pay the premiums offered. It leaves the Society in rather an embarrassed situation.

The threatened duel between the editor of the Adrian Record and the editor of the HERALD, has given rise to many comments from our neighborhood exchanges. Don't get excited, gentlemen. That event is certain to take place at some time in the misty future. We shall see to it that every editor in the second congressional district has a free pass to the show.

When the Detroit conference appointments were published last week Adrian was left among other places "to be supplied." The vacancy has been filled by the transfer from the Ohio M. E. conference to Adrian of Rev. W. W. Case, a gentleman highly indorsed. Rev. Mr. Wilson, the retiring pastor, preached his farewell sermon at Adrian Sunday, and now goes to the East Ohio conference.

The entertainment given by L. F. Wheeler at the opera house last Thursday evening proved to be very interesting and merited a much larger audience. A large number of excellent views in Russia and Spain were presented beside some beautiful pieces of statuary, mostly from Lewis' art gallery in Coldwater. Mr. Wheeler contemplates going on the road this winter with his views, and here's hoping that he may meet with the success that he certainly deserves.

Tuesday, Sept. 22d, was the birthday of Mrs. Robt. Crosby and Mrs. Wm. Bresie and a goodly number of friends met at the residence of the former in the afternoon and at the home of the latter in the evening to celebrate the event, and a jolly good time was had. The Tecumseh Cornet Band appeared in the evening and furnished some excellent music. Uncle Billy watched his melon patch, grapes, pears, peaches and turkeys with fondness, but concludes that birth-days and the cyclone are good for 46x68—they are for a fact—come again.

Robt. Stretch was in town this week.

P. W. Adams starts for his home in Delaware next Monday.

G. S. Tiffany is putting extensive improvements on his residence.

Sutton, Fairfield & Co., have a fine new sign on the front of their store.

Miss Cora Fowle, of Hudson, was the guest of L. F. Wheeler and mother last Saturday.

John Clough returned last Tuesday from a two weeks visit with friends at Rushyliania, Ohio.

Gainsley & Co. will open a new stock of Dry Goods in the Lawrence Block about the 1st of October.

The new front steps of the Court House are a decided improvement to the looks of the building.

Mrs. S. J. Walker and "Grandma Jackson," of Norvell, have been spending a few days among their Tecumseh friends.

A. Selders, sensational reporter for the Toledo Sunday Democrat, was doing the town last Saturday, in the interest of that paper.

Geo. Bostwick has recovered from his late illness sufficiently to be about, and he started for his home in East Saginaw yesterday to recuperate his strength.

The finest celery we have seen this season was left at the HERALD office this morning. It was raised at Prairie Side farm by H. L. Stewart, to whom we return our thanks.

The Gardener's Monthly for September is at hand and is an extra good number. This magazine is now in its fortieth year, but like old wine, it improves with age. Send for a sample copy to Chas. H. Marot, Philadelphia.

The ladies of Addison have constituted themselves a committee on sidewalks, and have raised money by subscription to pay for them. The walks should be constructed very wide. Addison whisky requires room.—Adrian Record.

Rumor says that two more bands will soon be organized here, one of which will be composed of young ladies. Although we have nothing against the other bands, the HERALD will bet its money on the young ladies, every time.

Mr. A. P. Coddington hailed us on the side walk yesterday and said "Take my wheat notice out of the HERALD at once. I have sold every bushel I had—520 bushels—and people are still calling for more. I find that advertising pays."

Ben Garlinghouse has given up following the plow and other agricultural pursuits and has embarked in the insurance business in company with A. W. Haight. Ben and Lon make a strong team and will undoubtedly succeed in their business venture.

The following are the regular standing committees of the Tecumseh School Board for the coming year:
On Teachers—Mills, McNair, House.
On Finance—Bills, House, North.
On Buildings—North, Bills, McNair.
On Supplies—House, North, Mills.
Special Com. on New Building—McNair, Mills, Bills.

Miss Fannie Condit, of Adrian Mich., passed through the city this morning en route for Austin, Tex., where she will engage in school-teaching. Miss Condit has been employed in the Tecumseh schools for two years past and her departure is greatly regretted.—Toledo Bee.

S. C. Stacy, of the Tecumseh Herald, has been seriously ill of hay fever, but is able to ride out now. Hay fever was the last exercise down on his list of summer recreations.—Adrian Record.

"Exercise," "summer recreations." There, Bro. Smith; if you want another duel on your hands, just continue these slanderous allusions a week or two longer.

P. W. Adams is putting in his few days at Tecumseh to the best advantage. His call upon us one day last week, while we were bolstered up in the rocking chair at home did us "lots of good." His son Calvin is out with him this trip, and, by the way, Calvin has got to be a bigger man than his father.

Geo. W. Stacy and J. E. Bement, of East Buffalo have formed a copartnership and will henceforth conduct the live stock commission business under the firm name of Stacy & Bement. They are both salesmen of long experience and strict integrity and will doubtless control most of the business from this section.

The Tecumseh Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle will hold a meeting on Saturday evening of this week at Dr. R. B. House's office at 7:30 o'clock, for the purpose of electing officers and organizing for work for the coming year. A cordial invitation is extended to any who are not members of the circle as well as to the members, to be present at this meeting. Any information respecting the course, reading or expense, will be cheerfully furnished. Come prepared to subscribe for "The Chautauquan" and to order your books.

Capt. Foster is settling down to his new duties as manager of The Patterson like a veteran. As fast as his old traveling friends ascertain that he is again running a hotel here, they give him their patronage.

Rev. Geo. W. Hudson has been transferred to Hancock, Lake Superior, and will depart next week for his field of labor. We regret exceedingly to lose Bro. Hudson from among us, and we heartily commend him to the citizens of Hancock as a first class pulpit orator and a most estimable christian gentleman. The best wish we can offer his successor, Mr. Potter, is that he may fill to equally good acceptance the place now vacated by Bro. Hudson.

THE HUDSON SCHOOL MUDDLE.

A nice little muddle has arisen over the last school election in one of the Hudson districts. On the first ballot taken there were several candidates none of whom received a majority, but one had a large plurality. On the second ballot some of the names were withdrawn and a majority of the votes was given to another man. Both men now claim the election. The meeting adjourned sine die and hence the board doubted its power to call a special election. So they have concluded to call an "expression meeting," which will be held Sept. 24th, at which ballots will be cast for the two candidates whose title is in dispute, and the man receiving the most votes will be appointed by the board to fill the vacancy.

Under the present provisions of the school law there is no excuse for a muddle of this kind. The law now provides that a plurality vote shall elect, this amendment to the school law having been made at the session of 1883. When the balloting for trustees begins, the Moderator should announce the first ballot as an informal ballot. An informal ballot is simply a showing of hands; it carries no election with it. The Moderator has power to order any number of informal ballots, from one to a dozen, and so long as the ballots taken are declared as informal no election can result; but either the Moderator, or the meeting itself by a vote, can at any time order a formal ballot; and upon the first formal ballot, the candidate receiving the most votes, that is, a plurality of the votes cast, will be elected. No subsequent vote by acclamation is required. The fact that one person receives a plurality of all the ballots cast on a formal ballot, of itself, elects that person trustee, and it becomes the duty of the Moderator to declare the election accordingly.

ANOTHER FIRST RATE APPOINTMENT.

Last Saturday's papers contained the announcement that Mr. N. B. Bacon, of Toledo, an architect of that city and a brother in-law of the President, had received the appointment of superintendent of the government building there. Apropos of this appointment it may be interesting to our readers to learn that Mrs. N. B. Bacon and her two children have been rusticating in Tecumseh for about three weeks, making it their home at Mrs. Webster's on Union street. On Friday last Mr. Bacon came up from Toledo to remain one day and on Saturday the family returned to their home in Toledo. Mr. Bacon first learned of his appointment on reaching home last Saturday. During Mrs. Bacon's sojourn in Tecumseh, she formed many new acquaintances, and she impressed all with whom she came in contact as being a woman of most estimable qualities and great force of character. She is a woman of decided domestic tastes, her whole ambition seeming to be to labor for the happiness and welfare of husband and children. We hope she may favor Tecumseh with frequent visits in the future.

The Free Press of Monday had the following special in relation to Mr. Bacon's appointment.

N. B. Bacon, the brother-in-law of President Cleveland, who was Saturday appointed Superintendent of the Toledo Government Building, returned from out the city to-day.

"My appointment was a great surprise to me," said he. "I was not an applicant, although at one time my name was presented without solicitation on my part. There is nothing political in it. I suppose the President, not having the name of any Democrat before him, and believing the place should be filled, appointed me who was a supporter of his. I voted for him. I am and have been a supporter of his administration, not because I am related to him but because it is a worthy administration."

"The question may be asked what your politics are. Will you state?"

"I won't say that I am a Democrat nor a Republican. Let people judge for themselves. I shall continue to support Cleveland and his policy."

"What do you think of the President?"

"He is a man of great firmness, and all will find that he will be President. He will enforce the laws as he finds them: he will not ignore any law. I do not say he believes in the Civil Service law, but he finds it on the books and he will enforce it."

"Was your name presented some time ago?"

"Yes, and the President said it was too early for him to commit himself at that time. I am told that Mr. Manning wanted me appointed, and went to the President, and that it was to him that he made the reply that he would not appoint any relative to office."

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

The Morenci fair will be held next week.

The Salvation Army have made a raid on Ann Arbor.

At Tuesday noon there were sixteen hundred entries to the county fair.

Hause Bros., of Clinton, are running their cider mill to its fullest capacity.

David Woodward, of Clinton, exhibited his chilled plow at the state fair last week.

The Shawnee mineral springs at Monroe are gaining quite a reputation for their health giving properties.

Will Carleton, Michigan's popular poet, lectured at Adrian last evening. It is needless to say that he was greeted with a crowded house.

The many friends of Rev. A. B. Storms, of Tipton, are congratulating themselves upon his return to the same field for another year.

A. J. Dean, of Adrian, has served as treasurer of the state agricultural society for eighteen years. In three years more he will be old enough to vote.

The cornet bands of Saline have consolidated and peace once more spreads her angelic wings over our sister village. The tooters can now toot in harmony.

A resident of Deerfield is said to have raised a cucumber that measures five feet and eight inches in length. Now please tell us how long the man is who owns that cucumber.

At the Uncle Tom's Cabin show at Adrian last Tuesday evening the new water works were tapped to produce the fountain scene. This was a very wise arrangement, as it saved the ladies the necessity of bringing along their smelling bottles.

One of our banking houses here informs us that it has received a large number of Bohemian oat notes, for collection, and that in almost every case the makers come in and pay up rather than have it go out that they have been nipped.—Adrian Press.

Mrs. Emily Hunt, a widow pensioner, living on the outskirts of Hudson, lost her house last Saturday at about ten o'clock, by fire. The conflagration originated in the kitchen. The loss on the house and contents, including some valuable papers, will be fully $2 000. The insurance amounts to $800, in the Watertown, of New York.

A peculiar wedding took place last week at Morenci, by which two deaf mutes were united in marriage, Mr. Jas. H. Hull and Miss Dora Keefer. The ceremony was communicated to them by signs through an interpreter. They are both graduates of the Flint deaf and dumb school and are said to be very intelligent and fine looking young people.

Man is called the lord of creation, but this is a misnomer. In boyhood he is tied to a woman's apron strings; in early manhood he bows down and worships a girl, and in maturity he is ruled by a kid in longstop clothes and India rubber lungs. From the cradle to the grave he is a slave, and the older he grows the more insignificant his master, as a rule.

Alfred Briggs, a son of probate register, Mr. A. H. Briggs, while at work for James Webb, at the Valley, Monday, was overcome with the heat and remained unconscious about four hours. Dr. Piersol was sent for and soon succeeded in restoring consciousness. It was apparently a case of sunstroke. Mr. Briggs is about 25 years of age.—Adrian Press.

The liberal list of premiums which the Morenci fair offers this year—the most generous, indeed, it has ever offered—ought to insure, as it doubtless will, judging from present prospects, the largest display in all departments which has been seen at any exhibition on the grounds. Some fine races, for which the fair also makes an extra inducement, are expected to take place.—Morenci Observer.

A lady was seen seated in a buggy on Main street this forenoon guiding a spirited horse by the reins while the bit was out of the horse's mouth, and pulled well back under the animal's neck. When a gentleman informed the lady of the peculiar way of driving she was greatly surprised at the condition of things, having driven some distance from home in that way. She had a little child with her, and had the horse become frightened things would have probably become serious.—Jackson Courier.

Manager Wells, of the soldiers' home, has issued a circular announcing that temporary relief will be afforded old soldiers at St. Mark's hospital, Grand Rapids, and indicating what blanks are necessary for those making application for admission, which blanks can be secured by addressing Col. Wells. Supervisors throughout the state are urged to co-operate with the manager in seeing that soldiers entitled to the privileges of the home are secured their rights, and that unworthy applicants are debarred. After admission soldiers will be required to abstain from drunkeness, disorderly conduct and insubordination, under penalty of expulsion. The period of residence is at the will of the beneficiary during good behavior.—Port Huron Times.

Chas. Lawrence has purchased a farm near Manchester and will join the grangers next summer.

Jas O'Riley fell from a load of wood last Tuesday afternoon and was dangerously injured about the head.

The race for the championship of Tecumseh will be a two mile race and will be skated next Wednesday evening. Knapp's band will furnish the music. Let every one be present as several of the swiftest skaters in the village have entered. Admission 10c. skates 15c.

John Kennedy, the man arrested for the burglary of Marsh's safe, was discharged last Thursday after his examination, but was immediately arrested on the charge of trying to pass a forged note at Lilley's bank on Fred Duel, last December. He was brought up before Justice Burridge last Tuesday and had a partial examination. His case was adjourned until next week Wednesday.

On next Saturday, September 26th, Adrian Light Guard will give an excursion to Detroit via. L. S. & M. S. R. R. to Wyandotte and thence by the splendid steamer "Excelsior" up the river to Detroit. Parties on the Jackson branch can take the regular morning train and connect with the excursion train at Lenawee Junction. Fare for the round trip $1.50. Returning, the Steamer will leave foot of Woodward Avenue at 5 P. M., prompt, allowing excursionists full five hours for business, pleasure, and sight seeing in the city. The great trotting match between Clingstone and Harry Wilkes, takes place on the Hamtramck Course on the afternoon of this Excursion, and a game of Base Ball may also be witnessed between the Philadelphia and Detroit Clubs. THE LOCO WEED.

A Trans-Missipi Plant which Works Great Havoc Among Cattle.

For the last twelve years complaints have been made in trans-Mississippi regions particularly from the plain and mountain region, of deaths to live stock from eating supposably poisonous plants. Investigation traced the cause to two genera, either to species of Astragalus nearly allied to the lupine—and to oxytropis plants belonging to the pea family—a family (Papilionaceæ) not considered heretofore as containing virulent poisonous species, but which does contain plant food and forage plants. Like the plant producing milk-sickness, stock do not seem to eat it naturally, but some, when they begin, they continue persistently. These two genera of plants are found throughout the plains and mountain regions and including California, of Astragalus there are a great number of species. In California some of them grow with the taste and vigor of lucerne. It is asserted to grow on alkali, low wet and dry land. The genus Oxytropis, being not stock food, has partial tolerance [illegible] from the genus. The symptoms of the disease are temporary intoxication, passing to complete motorious and muscular wreck in the later stages, and fully developed, death results from starvation from inability to digest food. During the prodromic stages of the disease the animal becomes stupid, wild, or furious, sometimes acting as though possessed by [illegible]. No antidote has yet been discovered, hence extermination of the plants is the only remedy. This may be considered well nigh impossible over the great range of wild feeding grounds. In cultivated pastures, however, it may easily be managed. The common name of the Astragalus is milk vetch, and a number of species are described in Gray as existing east of the Mississippi, none known to be injurious, the species injurious being found only west of the Mississippi and only, it is believed as we approach the plains region.

"Astragalus Mollissimus, one of the weeds to which the general name of loco weed is given, is a perennial, herbaceous plant, of the region of the great plains from Colorado to New Mexico, Texas and Arkansas. There are usually a great many stalks proceeding from a large root stalk. They are reclining towards the base and erect above. The stalks are so short that the leaves and flowers at the base seem to proceed directly from the root. They are branching at the base and give rise to numerous leaves and long stems bearing the flowers and pods. The leaves are usually six to ten inches long, composed of nine to fifteen leaflets, borne on each side of the central leaf-stalk in pairs except the upper one. They are of oval form, one-half to three-quarters of an inch long, of a shining silvery blue from being clothed with soft silky hairs. The flower stalks are about as long, sometimes longer than the stalk of leaflets, naked below, and at the upper part (one-fourth to one-half) bearing a rather thick spike of flowers, which are nearly an inch long, narrow and somewhat cylindrical, the whole inner portion of the flower of a velvet of purple color, the calyx and [illegible] half as long as the corolla, and [illegible] pubescent (hairy). The flower has the general structure of the pea family, and is [illegible] by a short [illegible] which pass one half to the [illegible] of an inch long, very smooth and [illegible] about two [illegible].

Dr. George Lankester—There are two varieties—one large and one small—and this season are shown as [illegible]. They belong to the same family as the [illegible]. The [illegible] of the two is more hairy [illegible] than the larger variety. The larger variety is [illegible] Astragalus, just described, and [illegible] a smooth-stemed [illegible] differs in having an erect habit, [illegible] and [illegible] the great flower-stalks. The leaves are longer and narrower, about an inch long by one-quarter to one-half inch wide—and have respectively [illegible] the flowers are [illegible] in size. The flower-stalk proceeds from the root-stalk and is [illegible] nine to twelve inches long and naked except near the top, which has a rather close and thick cluster of flowers much like those of the Astragalus in general appearance—but differing very in some minute characters, but yet which separate it into another genus. The bloom is succeeded by erect, lance-shaped pointed pods of about an inch in length. The flowers are subject to much variation in color, some varieties being purple, some yellow and others being white. The species is very abundant on the high plains and in the mountains ranging from British America to Mexico.

From the fact that it is more common than Astragalus, and also more of a plain than a mountain species, it may be inferred that this is the plant that has given so much trouble in Western Iowa and especially westward. It is important that every farmer or complaint of of the farm should know it in order to effect its eradication.

Unlike the plant producing milk-sickness, there is little probability that it will be cut in pastures. It is indigenous to a wide range of territory and soil. It must be eradicated by special means. As it is a thorough-rooted perennial, this may be accomplished by thrusting a chisel-edged spade under it and prying it out. It may seem like a serious labor, but necessary, since the shorter the pasture becomes the more and more will stock become addicted to eating it and like milk-sickness, no remedy is known for the disease.—Chicago Tribune.

—Colonel Bill Snort, editor of the Crystal County Clarion and Farmer's Indicator, went to New Orleans not long since, and upon being shown his room at the hotel said, "This is a queer hotel. If a guest can pay his bills every week, what use has he got for a fire-escape? And if there is a fire-escape, why should he pay his bills at the end of the week? There is some mystery about this hotel that I can't understand."—Texas Sylinos.

—Rev. N. J. Cushing, D.D., of Burmah, arrived at San Francisco a few days since. It is about twenty years since he left this country for the missionary field, and nine years since his first return. —Irreverent jokers put a gallon of whisky into the baptistry of an Indiana church, after the water had been tried for the immersion of a reformed drunkard. But their trick was turned to serious account by the victim, who, standing on the edge of the tank in his dripping robes described the outrage to the congregation and delivered a ringing speech for total abstinence.—Indianapolis Journal.

—The great defect even of our best teachers, and clergy as well, is that they are in a rut. No man or woman is great or good enough to dispense with the broadening and beneficent influence of everyday physical nature and the mighty university of human life. So be wise and use the golden hours for thorough ventilation of mind—imagination, sympathies, sense and soul.—Journal of Education.

—In England a parent can be prosecuted for the non-attendance of his child at school, and children must bring the penny school fee every Monday. The father of a child who did not bring his penny on two successive Mondays was summoned for "non-attendance," and the Lord Chief Justice held that the attendance of a child without the fee constituted no attendance under the by-laws of the School Board.

—The system carried out in Vienna for educating girls is certainly worthy of notice. They are kept at their studies until they are fifteen years of age. They then go through a course of teaching in the pantry and the kitchen under some member of the family, or sometimes under trained cooks for a year or two years. Thus they learn to do everything themselves, and to know the value of things long before they commence housekeeping on their own account, and though they may never be required to cook a dinner, they become independent of cooks and servants.—N. Y. Times.

A SERIOUS JOKE.

How a Frenchman Got Even with an Impertinent Stranger.

Among the frequenters of a well-known Parisian restaurant was a certain methodical personage, who dined there every day, and always at the same table, which the proprietor, with a due regard for so regular a customer, especially reserved for him. Once, however, by some mistake of the waiter, he found on arriving his usual place already occupied by a stranger; and, inwardly fretting at the disappointment, entered into conversation with the mistress of the establishment, who presided at the counter, and awaited the intruder's departure as patiently as he could. The latter seemed in no hurry, for, after consulting the bill of fare, he ordered another dish and a fresh bottle of wine, seeing which the habitue, who would rather have gone without his dinner than taken any place but his own, resolved at all hazards to get rid of the unwelcome guest, and addressing the dame du comptoir in a low tone, inquired if she knew who the individual at his table was.

"Not in the least," she replied; "this is the first time he has been here."

"And ought to be the last," he significantly remarked, "if you knew as much as I do."

"Why, who is he?"

"The executioner of Versailles."

"Mon Dieu!" exclaimed the terrified dame du comptoir, and calling her husband, imparted to him the information she had just received.

"Make out his bill," he said, and counter-order what he has asked for. He must not stay here, or we shall lose every customer we have."

Whereupon, armed with the document in question, he presently crossed the room to where the stranger was sitting, and inquired if he were satisfied with his dinner.

"Pretty well," was the answer, "but the service might be quicker. Why don't they bring what I ordered?"

"Monsieur," replied the traiteur, assuming an air of importance, "I am compelled to say that your presence here is undesirable; and that I must request you to leave my house as soon as possible, and on no account to set foot in it again."

"What on earth do you mean?" asked his astonished guest.

"You must be perfectly aware," continued the other, "that your being seen here is most prejudicial to me, and——"

"Speak plainly, man!" impatiently interrupted the stranger. "I insist on being told who you imagine me to be."

"Parbleu! you know as well as I do. The executioner of Versailles!"

"Ah! and pray who is your authority for this?"

"That gentleman," replied the proprietor of the restaurant, pointing to the habitue at the corner, who was beginning to feel uneasy as to the result of his "joke."

"Indeed!" said the stranger, raising his voice so as to be distinctly heard by every one present; "that gentleman has informed you that I am the executioner of Versailles. Well, he ought to know, for two years ago it was my painful duty to brand him!"

With these words, uttered in a tone of complete indifference he left the amount of reckoning on the table, leaving the other mystified to dine as he might.—Temple Bar.

A FINNISH CUSTOM.

How the People of That Russian Province Indulge in Their Annual Bath.

"In crossing the country I noticed that near every farm or settlement there was a small log hut with openings all darkened by smoke, and on asking what it was always received an answer that it was the savna.

"The savna is in fact the common bathroom of the farm and sometimes of the neighborhood. Every Saturday the savna is used by the whole family, the servants of the farm, and any guests that may be desirious of participating. A huge log fire is lit on a hearth in the room, and when the bricks or stones are red hot cold water is poured on them, which soon fills the room with steam. When all is ready the bathers gather of both sexes and all ages, simply in the state in which we are told our first progenitors disported themselves, and this even if the mercury is frozen to a lump in the bulb. When the room is full fresh water is poured on the stones, and the bathers begin to belabor each other with birch twigs, an operation which has about the same effect as rubbing down the nude form by a hard brush and a powerful hostler would have. The proceedings are naturally carried on under a great deal of fun from the younger members of the company. When the bath is over, and a profuse perspiration has been caused by the whipping and the steam, the whole company adjourn to the snow outside, in which another bath takes place. This over, the bathers adjourn to various directions in the same clothing they came. I had many opportunities of witnessing this spectacle on my lengthy journey into the heart of Finland."—Sophos Tromboll.

Grant's Nearness.

At Richfield Springs one day, General Buckner heard some military skeptics criticising General Grant's military ability. "Why, Hooker was as brave as Grant," said one man, excitedly. "But Grant was a very near man," said Buckner. "And McClellan was a greater strategist," said another scoffer. "But Grant was famous for his nearness," said Buckner. "He may not have been brave, but he was always near." "What do you mean by nearness?" asked another scoffer, petulantly. "Why, when I looked around at Fort Donelson for some one to surrender to, Grant was right there handy and I noticed when General Lee surrendered at Appomattox, Grant was the nearest General to take his sword. O he was near, Grant was!"—N. Y. Independent.

—An exchange asks: "Why wasn't the spring chicken chosen as an emblem of this country?" We can not answer with any degree of exactness, but suppose the fathers of the country were not familiar with antediluvian ornithology.—Roxbury Advocate.

AN UNDESIGNING WIDOW

Beguiled by the Machinations of Her Thirteen-Year-Old Daughter.

The "evidences of design" in the human widow have been so much dwelt upon, in fiction and satire, that it is a relief to turn to a tale in which her essentially simple and trustful nature is set forth. Such a tale was told touching a widow in Easton, Penn., who was beguiled, by the machinations, not of man, but of her own female child, aged thirteen.

The child, as our readers have noted, was in the habit of visiting a widower's large brick house, presumably to play with the widower's children, when it occurred to her to extract money from her own mother, under pretense of making love to her in the ostensible behalf of the widower, in letters "written with a lead pencil" by herself. The inventions she employed for this purpose were such as would naturally occur to a person of her years and inexperience. She wrote, in the name of the widower, for fifteen dollars to help pay the men in the widower's employ, for money to buy the widower a turkey, to pay the widower's gas bill, and to pay for the keep of the widower's horse. These crude demands for money were accompanied by professions of attachment not less crude, such as the childlike device of addressing the widow as "My Dear Wife."

These are the devices which a child of thirteen would naturally adopt. The wonder is not that the child adopted them, but that the mother was taken in by them. Her first husband must have been a prosaic and literal soul whose speech was the transparent vesture of his thought, and she must have rashly generalized from him to his sex. But what a fund of simple faith in mankind must this undesigning widow have accumulated when it could be drawn upon with success and without limit by such artifices as these.

Her daughter did not take after the widow. She was the confidence child of a confiding mother. We should not even criticise the crudity of her applications for money since they were successful. Like authors whose productions are sneered at by the critics and devoured by readers, it must be admitted in her favor that she knew her public and adjusted her means to her ends. Of the principle of fraudulent finance she had a precocious mastery. It is the same principle employed by Ferdinand Ward and Mrs. Howe, of Boston, and is involved in the familiar process of "priming a pump" or administering a driblet in order that a copious stream may flow. She acknowledged in the name of the widower in the form of casual clocks and occasional vases the widow's bounty, and upon one occasion, as an unimpeachable guarantee of good faith, produced a plain gold ring, which, it may be assumed, was the ultimate object of the widow's investment. In this manner she gradually extracted from her mother $300, and without doubt rejoices in a larger collection of pink ribbons and cheap jewelry than any other child in Easton. The simple faith of the mother's character shines the more by contrast with the guile of her daughter. So free is she from the subtle and scheming character falsely ascribed by literary persons to the estate of widowhood that she is plainly an easier prey for male deceivers than her precociously accomplished child.—N. Y. Times.

THE HORNET.

Description of an Interesting Insect—A Creature Whose Advent Is Marked by Stern Reality.

The hornet is an abridged edition of bloody murder strained through a rag.

He bears the same relation to John L. Sullivan that condensed milk does to a cow.

In constructing the mule-end of the hornet, Jove sharpened a streak of lightning on the cheek of a Chicago drummer and dipped it in the gall of a campaign lie.

It will not do to confound the hornet with the bee. The hornet is clad in the mantle of a more mysterious individuality, and on his brow rests a diadem of baleful gloom. He has a oneness of character that is unknown to the bee.

The bee is not without a touch of sweetness and light, but the sweetness of the hornet seems to have been spoiled in the making.

The coming and the going of the bee are mellowed by poetic associations. She is proverbial for industry. The victim of the bee can salve his hurt by quoting Watts.

It is not thus with the hornet. His coming is a stern reality, and his going is lost in the murky atmosphere of profanity, if not more so.

The hornet is the cowboy of the insect world:

The offensive partisan of entomological wingedness:

The winged essence of volcanic energy;

The breach-loading paper wad of viewless fire.

On dainty wings of lightning he reels off an infinitesimal coil of gigantic pain, and in his pistol-pocket he carries a red-hot stone.

A political discussion is the supreme aggregation of explosive enthusiasm:

The ten-strike of an angry mule is a supermundane earthquake;

The yowl of a tom-cat is tangled confusion of wall-eyed sound:

But the caress of a hornet is brimstone fire with a stick in it.—Chicago Ledger.

—The Pike's Peak Railway, which is expected to be in operation this year, will be the most notable piece of track in the world. It will mount 2,000 feet higher than the Lima and Oroya Railway in Peru. It is now in operation to a point over 12,000 feet above the sea level. The entire thirty miles of its length will be a succession of complicated curves and grades, with no piece of straight track longer than 300 feet.—Chicago Mail.

The Voice of the People.

The people, as a whole, seldom make mistakes, and the unanimous voice of praise which comes from those who have used Hood's Sarsaparilla, fully justifies the claims of the proprietors of this great medicine. Indeed, these very claims are based entirely on what the people say Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for them. Read the abundant evidence of its curative powers, and give it a fair, honest trial.

The colored women of Mobile have organized an art association.

An old and intimate friend of mine is Parker's Hair Balsam. I have used it five years, and could not do without it. It has stopped my hair from falling, restored its natural black color and wholly cleansed it from dandruff. Miss Pearl Access, St. Louis, Mo.

The story is told of an old hunter in Michigan who lost his way in the woods a number of times while the country was new. At length he secured a pocket compass and its use was explained to him by a friend. But shortly afterward he lost his way again and lay out as usual. When found he was asked why he did not travel by the compass. He did not dare, he said. He wanted to go north, and he "tried to make the thing point north, but it wasn't no use, 'twould shake, shake, shake round and point southeast every time.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburgh, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by C. A. Wright & Co.

Many a man who had lost nerve, vigor and energy, has been cured by Hunt's Remedy.

'Right Peart.'

"I was right peart till the rheumatiz got in," said a suffering old man who lived near the swamp. Fact is, wherever you live you can't be right peart if you are a victim of this troublesome disease. Captain C. W. Hostenpiller, Springfield, O., says, "I found great relief from inflammatory rheumatism by using Brown's Iron Bitters." Thousands of other people have found similar relief.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Mrs. Dr. Chandler, of Saline, visited at J. S. Kies' last week. She returned home Saturday.

The household goods of Rev. Kerridge were taken to Grass Lake last Friday. Mr. Kerridge occupied his pulpit there for the first time last Sunday. We are sorry to lose him and his family.

Mrs. Esther Jenkins, of Bridgewater, died last Friday. Her sickness, which was quite brief, was caused by a fall. She was buried Sunday, which was her seventy-eighth birthday.

Progressive eucher in all its attractiveness has presented itself among us for the first time. Demoralizing effects may be confidently anticipated.

Last Monday evening as Miss Lina Jones and two other young ladies were going home, they noticed they were followed by a couple of men, one of whom had spoken insultingly to them early in the evening. The girls became frightened and run until they reached David Woodward's, where they run in. One of the fellows was discovered soon afterward, looking in at the windows. Tuesday morning they were called to account and made to settle matters with Mr. Woodward for $10 apiece. A little of this medicine administered to a few of such fellows around town would be productive of some good.

Mrs. Chas. Burroughs and Mrs. Harriet Lancaster visited in Ridgeway last week.

Mrs. George Kies has been spending two or three days in Clinton this week.

Mrs. Frank Silvers, of Tecumseh, and her father, Mr. David Shepard, of Lyons, N. Y., visited at A. B. Van DeMark's last Thursday.

Ed. A. Clark was in Clinton over Sunday.

Mrs. Alonzo Clark left here for Chicago last Thursday.

Who will have the next tea-party?

F. L. Couch, of Bay City, was in town last Friday.

The Episcopal social will be held this week Thursday eve at the residence of Mrs. E. A. Clark. All are invited.

Robert Codling's family are moving into J. L. Tuttle's house, lately occupied by Peter McMahon.

John Smith was taken suddenly ill while at the store last Friday. He was taken home as soon as possible. He soon recovered sufficiently to get up, and is now able to be at the store.

Miss Lora Reynolds, of Tecumseh, is visiting Miss Lou Reynolds.

Mrs. George Runyan has been quite sick with neuralgia for a few days.

Mr. Chas. Starrett has been visiting his brother, Henry Starrett.

Among those who went from here to the horse races at Detroit last Saturday were F. D. Lancaster, P. C. Smith, James Pawson, David Lancaster, Henry Lancaster and Will Muir.

S. F. Marstellar and wife and A. B. VanDeMark, drove over to Adrian to the fair Thursday.

We would say to our dear friend of manifold literary attainments and shot gun proclivities, that he is wrong again. Hard as the task may be to undeceive him and again to set him afloat on the sea of uncertainty, we feel that it is a duty to ourselves and to the last person whom his unerring instinct has pointed out as the correspondent to this paper, to assure him that he is as far from knowing who is, and has been, acting in that capacity as he was six months ago. We feel that it would be a kindness to Dr. Burchard and save him from,—brain fever perhaps—to lay aside our mask and forever set his doubts at rest. However we enjoy wearing it a little too well to discard it—as yet.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Delightful weather this week.

Our village sick list is on the decrease.

Corn cutting is well under way in this section.

Seeding is about completed here.

Numerous of our citizens are in attendence at the fair of Hillsdale county this week.

W. J. Bacon has sold his large fruit evaporator to G. M. Lewis & Son who propose to buy apples and keep it in operation. The evaporator has a capacity of one hundred pounds per day, and turns out the finest in superior condition.

Our dealers complain of light trade last week but report "biz" booming now.

Our old friend Porter Beal, of Rollin, was in attendence at the meetings of the Pomological Society at Grand Rapids last week. He reports lots of "big folks" talk, speeches, and a grand time generally.

Miss Nellie Lamb, of Blissfield, who is staying with her grandmother, Mrs. Susan Williams, is recovering from her recent illness. She is under the care of Dr. Wm. Brown.

We are informed that our old friend Rev. B. T. Bailey, of Rollin, contemplates moving to some point in California or Arizona for the purpose of securing a better climate for his wife, who has been in feeble health for some time. The elder has for many years been connected with the F. B. church of Rollin village, and occupies a warm place in the hearts of all classes of people there, as well as at other places where he is known.

While on their way to the county fair on Thursday of last week, Mr. Lewis Pearson and Miss Mary Parker, both of Woodstock, chanced to take passage in the same cart, and before reaching their destination the idea occured that if they could register as man and wife the hotel bill could be materially deminished and they accordingly sought out a man who keeps the necessary apparatus and underwent the splicing operation. We wish the young people a "fair" time all through life.

The sulky and floating harrows exhibited at the fair last week by Mr. N. Osborn, of Woodstock, were both awarded the first premium, notwithstanding the competition was unusually strong.

A couple of Cleveland's mammoth squashes are on exhibition at the Hillsdale county fair this week which measure 6 ft. 2 in. and 5 ft. 6 in. in circumference. They were grown by Mr. James Cleveland of this place, and attract no little attention.

A pleasant little birthday surprise party was planned by the friends of Miss Cora Locy on the afternoon of the 24th inst. A quite a number of the ladies were present and a very enjoyable time reported. Among the gifts presented was a ten dollar gold piece and fine plush covered autograph album from Miss Lacy's mother; also a tasty birthday card presented by little Murnie Kline.

While returning home from Rome last Sunday, Mr. Lincoln Sales and wife, of Geneva, were thrown suddenly from the buggy in which they were riding and quite badly bruised. A little child about six weeks old was hurt quite seriously and is not expected to live.

The one mile race by non-experts advertised to come off at the rink Saturday night went by default, the cause of which was the failure on the part of Mr. Al. Maples, one of the contestants, to present himself at the appointed time. Messrs J. G. Waterman and Cheever Brooks consented to skate the race however, and the audience which was very large, was profuse in its expressions of satisfaction.

ONSTED ODDS.

There are several private telephone lines in this place. The last one put up is from D. Sickner's to Blacksmith shop. Guess Charley intends to know when dinner is ready.

Messrs. Snow & Pulver have greatly improved the appearance of their places by grading and seeding.

The special school meeting Monday evening, resulted in the election of S. G. Aten as moderator to fill vacancy. Mr. Aten was appointed two years ago to fill vacancy and has held the office since that time without any other appointment or election. At the last regular meeting Mrs. Greenleaf was elected director, and knowing we had no legal moderator, called a special meeting to elect one with the aforesaid result. It is doubtful, we think if the above is strictly legal.

Spence Evans is thinking of moving onto his farm and is now repairing the house.

W. B. Raymond was in town for a day or two last week.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

Celia Jones of '79 teacheth the young minds of Hanover how to shoot. Her sister Grace is with her, but expects to be in school at the Seminary next term.

Some improvements are being made at the observatory, and now the astronomy class often points the "long seeing eye" at objects celestial.

The unsightly backstop, no longer adorns the campus. It received a coat of white paint, and is now neatly lettered with advertisements. Tecumseh and Adrian merchants have a fine bullitin board and the Seminary base ball club in return a brace of fine birds, yellow eagles.

New students keep coming in. Let the good work go on.

The Seminary sent its quota to the county fair. School was dismissed one day and everybody went. All had a good time.

Mechanics from Toledo are putting in the new boiler for the heating apparatus.

May Underwood has been indisposed for a few days. No serious trouble apprehended.

Samuel Tingly and wife, Stephen Lombard and wife, of Rollin, and R. A. Rogers, of Medina, were the guests of Superintendent Harkness during fair time.

TIPTON TOPICS.

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley, of Adrian, are visiting their daughter, Mrs. J. Fridd.

Miss Alma Tripp, who has been sick with typhoid fever is convalescent.

Rev. F. L. Osborne, formerly of this place, who has been preaching at Fairfield during the past year, has gone to his new charge, Unionville, Tuscola Co.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Osborne intend visiting friends in Isabella Co., next week.

Rev. Mr. Barnes, of Clinton, preached in the Congregational church one week ago last Sunday, Rev. Mr. Wall preaching at Clinton.

Mr. Tyler is teaching the Center school, Miss Leila VanValkenburg, Dist. No.1, Miss Tina VanValkenburg the Paragon and Mr. Crittenden the school two miles west.

Miss Fannie Storms who has been visiting her brother for several weeks has returned to her home near Chelsea.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The county session of Good Templars was held at Union hall Thursday, and though the day selected debarred the teachers from coming, the Jackson fair kept many others tied to home affairs, and some could not leave half sown wheat fields; the remnant was respectable in number, and after busiuess was finished closed their visit with an evening entertainment eminently satisfactory to themselves and a large company besides. Prayer was made by Rev. Bush of this place. Hon. D. P. Sagendorf, of Jackson, presided as Dist. chief; Lester Palmer as stage manager and Sumner Ladd, of Brooklyn, welcomed the assembly. He is a good speaker and possesses the happy faculty of stating facts without insulting his opponents with reflective personalities. As the Templar Code includes total prohibition of manufacture or sale of intoxicants, and a worse yet enormity called woman suffrage, they are offensive partizans without more ado, and without chance of being turned out of postoffices in retaliation. W. C. Sharp and his choir furnished plenty of music; boys and girls spoke comic medleys and gave pathetic recitations and Pierce and Sweezy contributed sentiments woven of personal experience that indicated morality to be a much more necessary attribute of general good than a belief in christianity, minus practice.

Friday evening Rev. Hills lectured on the growth of temperance, and whatever he may do on election days, he did not play hide and coop with the whiskey bottle during the talk. He differs from the Crosby divines, and compared their policy with that of one Judas who hanged himself. If he keeps on that fashion he will make himself unpopular with some who evidently mean business. I have some curiosity about that business and so have my friends the saloon keepers perhaps. Gentleman of the bar, do you suppose they intend to unite broken ranks by luring seceders back to place and fasten their votes once more with this old promise of respectability, done over for a coupling-pin? It don't look like fair play to rule you out of trade just because you lack money to ransom it from guilt stain, and keep it in semblance of purity behind marble counters. It would build up an aristocracy on a money basis, by making the amount of revenue you can furnish, the sole gauge of your respectability. You will have to combine purses and tear down your store houses and build greater, but you need not be discouraged for partnership often saves expense of clerk hire. Of course it is not possible ministers will play such a game of muffle mouse and you will please regard my question as a freak of imagination.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Fine fall weather.

Wheat is looking fine but needs rain.

Corn cutting is a tedious task as it is down very bad.

Whooping cough still prevails in the village and vicinity.

Mr. Asa Smith has a telephone from his house to the market.

Geo. D. Amer attended the teachers examination at Adrian Saturday.

Mr. John Housman and Mrs. Dr. D. W. Loree returned Friday evening from a visit with friends near St. John, Clinton Co.

The question is often asked when are the literarys going to begin. We would say ask the President, but think before long.

Quite a good many took in the fair at Adrian last week and report a fine time, and say the show was the finest they ever saw.

Miss Lizzie Clark is at Dundee attending school, making her home with Mrs. Henry Watlin.

Mrs. John Arner visited Mrs. Philip Beckley at Britton, Tuesday.

Mr. Ezra Smith, of St. John, who is at the University at Ann Arbor, spent Sunday, Monday and Tuesday with relatives and friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. Adin Phelps, of Camden, N. Y., are visiting their son and family, Mr. Alfred Lawton.

The ladies will give a social this week Friday evening at the home of Mrs. Sarah Rappleye. The President says all persons that do not want an office should be present as it is the time for the election of officers. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

We are glad to welcome Mr. Asa Smith and family to our village circle of friends. Mr. Smith will run his meat business in the building formerly occupied by G. W. Jackson and will be found at the block ready to carve the round to suit the taste of all.

DOLLY'S LUCK.

A new play which has made its appearance this season, with Pauline Markham in the title role. Wherever it has been played the press with one accord, speak in the highest praise of it. The company which presents it, and especially of the charming actress Miss Markham, who assumes the leading part of the play itself, that excellent dramatic critic, the Philadelphia Register, speaks as follows: "Dolly's Luck" was only launched upon the stage at the opening of the present season, and is already a grand success, and gives promise of enjoying a long run. It is more than is claimed for it; unlike most plays, it is strongly dramatic, without the usual murder betrayals, suicides, etc. There is not a weak point or a superfluous line in the whole construction; it is chaste and charming, tragedy and comedy are deeply interwoven; such seemed to be the opinion of every person present. The audience fairly screamed with applause, and which was often so prolonged and vociferous as to interrupt the actors in their parts, thus continuing the play until nearly eleven o'clock.

FORESTS OF STONE.

Probing for Logs Beneath the Surface in New Jersey.

Trying to Chop a Tree of Rock—Trunks, Boughs and Leaves Turned to Stone—A Description of Some of Nature's Wonders.

"If you want to see something curious," said a friend who was a member of a Government survey, "go down with me to Woodbine." Four miles beyond Woodbine, out on the sandy stretch of old sea bottom or beach that is termed the Cape May Peninsula, we came upon Dennisville, where all the Dennises of all time had evidently settled. A boy, Dennis said there were twenty-five hundred of them and nine-tenths were evidently children. They lived in scattered shanties or houses on a long narrow street on each side of which malar a stalks abroad from the great swamps that constitute their boundary. The latter however, that are perhaps over twelve square miles in extent, are the means of providing a living to nearly all the inhabitants of Dennisville, though the nature of their occupation would never be suspected from external observation.

"We're all in the logging business," said a tall, thin Dennis, yet as far as the eye could reach not a tree could be seen standing that would make even the ghost of a fair log. "There aren't any growin'," continued the man. "They're underground. We dig for them, or spear them as you might say. Here's the tools," and stepping into a low hut he brought out a crow or bar, like a great spear, mounted at intervals and was stretched out into a long sleader pointed rod. "We wade along," continued the man, "and prode with the feeler and when we strike a log we feel around and if it's a good one we dig down and if it isn't we let her soak, that's about the way of it."

"You wade in dirty water?"

"That's about it," replied the man. "You know we're obliged to be a whit odd or so, we've got the name of it, onnabow."

"The secret of this business," said my friend, the geologist, "is that ages ago all this area was covered with a fine growth of large trees, and the same are found growing in some parts of the swamp yet, but they have died out and fallen down and sunk into the soft mud, and so been covered up by mould and mud, until many other layers have grown over them, but in some remarkable way the wood is preserved and these sunken ancient logs are just as good for shingles and other articles as they were when alive, hence, for many years there has been a steady hunt for them, and Dennisville is a result of the industry. To the botanist the tree is the evergreen white cypress or cypressus thyoides sempervirens, and the numbers that once grew over this swamp and that have been entombed are beyond conception. The trees upon or near the surface are the only ones available, and fortunately are the best, but far below there are probably myriads of others turned to stone and representing the past geological ages of the earth. The logs were worked out by the men who are nicknamed 'Swampoodles,' and who live in the midst of the malarious district all their lives. When a log is found a ditch is made about it, into which the water soon flows. A great saw is then applied and the roots removed, and as a rule the log will rise to the surface and can be cut up and carried off, though in many localities the shingles are made right on the spot and dragged over the swamp on roads in many cases made of boughs and twigs. This curious business is not confined to New Jersey, but over in Delaware and Maryland there are similar swamps, where the shingle business has been carried on for years. One of the swamps in Delaware extends over twenty-five square miles, and hardly a house in Sussex County but what is shingled with the ancient deposit."

"I tell ye," said an old farmer from this region, "that we're livin' on a curious kind o' crust round here. In p'int of fact, my farm might be said to be perched on a reg'lar wood-pile, there ain't no end to it. I built a foundation to a barn some years ago down in the swamp lot, and the further down I dug the more logs I came to, and I tuck a way down its clear, strong and sound, and when a fire breaks out in the swamp you want to keep your eyes peeled, now I'm a-talkin'. Howsomever, I digress. Well, I'll just give you a little of my experience. When I first changed my old woman I bought a patch right in the edge of the swamp, and the land ran right up off at about half a mile. That summer it was monstrous dry, and after awhile the fire began creepin' up, and after we knew it it had crept up to within a thousand feet of the house. But we got at it with brush and, as we thought, put it out, and did, but that night I was awoke by hearin' a crash so loud that I sot straight up, the bull frogs had gone down, and when I got out there was a blaze right over by my fodder house. I got there in about two minutes, and I tell ye I was scared. There wasn't hide nor hair of the house, but a deep sawin' hole about fifty feet across, and the Lord knows how deep, and burning red hot, just like a volcano. I tell ye I got my folks out of that village for a while now. Fortunately it came on to rain the next day and soaked it out, and I ain't a-drawin' the long bow when I tell you that that bull kentry had been rounded by the fire. You see, that peat ran under ground for a thousand feet, eating away the wood, and then, when the end under the fodder, the weight of the stuff broke the crust in and down it went into a regular pit of fire. I tell you it was an unearthly place, I tell you, and I was thankful enough that it didn't get under the house. Would never have known what had us, would just melted down quick. Yes, there's heaps of places in the swamp district that's eaten out just the same way. The fire will run along for miles, sometimes, and then crop out where it's least expected. I know of one case where a party of shanglers left their hut one morning and when they came back it was gone and a fourth of an acre with it. If it had happened twenty hours later they'd have gone in. In the Delaware swamp you will find heaps of such places and green hands who go down there always think there has been a volcano, and so there has, after a fashion."

"The subject of underground forests," said my geological friend, "put on our way back, is an interesting one, and in the west there are some strange sights to be seen. I remember especially one locality about the headwaters of the Lithodendron River, where are thousands of trees lying about, as if some hurricane had swept over the spot and leveled them to the ground, but in every case the tree has turned to stone and the trunks now weigh tons where they formerly could be tossed about by the wind. A miner that I met told me that in one locality that he had visited the trees were standing, and they came to camp there. At first they did not notice it, as it was late in the fall, when all the leaves were off the trees, but he sent a darkey out to chop some wood, and as the fellow struck a tree the axe glanced off and streams of fiery sparks flew off in such numbers that he was frightened half to death, and came running into camp shouting that the place was haunted. He finally went out again, but was terrified by noting that even the twigs that he picked up on the ground were as heavy as lead; they had all turned into stone. He described the place as a weird one, the great trunks standing around here and there like monuments, some of them being fifty or sixty feet high. The two most famous localities are at Fort Wingate, New Mexico, and the Lithodendron, about twenty miles from the Navajo Springs, Arizona. From these localities a fine collection has been taken for the National Museum at Washington.

"A detail was sent out under the charge of Lieutenant J. T. C. Hegewald, of the Fifteenth Infantry, and they secured some magnificent specimens. The Navajoes that were tending their sheep in the vicinity believed the fallen trunks to represent the bones of former giants that their ancestors had killed, and could not understand why the 'Great Father' at Washington should want them. In this place they actually covered the ground in some spots, the trunks often being of great size. All through the valley of the Lithodendron they are found, thousands of tons lying scattered along the slopes. The majority were in pieces of twenty or ten feet long, so broken by changes of heat and cold. Other trunks were intact; one measured by the Lieutenant was two hundred feet in length and nearly five feet in diameter, the cores often containing wonderful specimens of quartz. The specimens were hauled to Sana Fe, N. M., and there shipped East by rail; but in a year or so not a specimen will be found, as a company has organized to secure them, as, when cut and polished, they make fine table tops. It is said that a house in Washington is to have pillars at the door made of two of these giants of a former age, that, when polished, showing the rich coloring, will make something entirely new in the way of decoration.

"Last summer," continued the geologist, "I took a run up the valley of the east fork of the Yellowstone. There is a country for you, and, fortunately, in the National Park and to be saved from destruction. In going up the valley you have the beautiful Yellowstone Mountains to the north and to the south the famous Amethyst Mountain, that for its fossil or stone forests is extremely remarkable. Directly opposite the valley of the Soda Butte Creek rises the mountain, with an exposed strata at least two thousand feet high. The summit is about nine thousand feet up. As you follow up the trail you will at once be struck with the curious surface of the mountain, and there in one section you can count distinctly at least twenty-five forest levels formed in this way. The first forest, perhaps a million years ago, grew and died down; soil accumulated and then another forest grew on that until finally the twenty-five have grown. In the meantime strata to the depth of two thousand feet has been deposited—that is, the distance from the present trees growing on top to the first one below is two thousand feet. You can count up to suit yourself how many years it took to accomplish this. For the first four hundred feet the display is not very striking, as the trunks are partially covered, but as your eye rises you are presented with a good, good illustration that is a marvel. At six feet from the bottom the levels are as distinct, marked as if they had been made by hand, every trunk and the roots standing out in bold relief—the handiwork of nature. Many are thrown out and prostrate from fifty to sixty feet in length and from five to six feet in diameter. In cases where the roots are seen penetrating the solid rock the sight is an impressive one, showing how many years it must have taken to accomplish such results. Some of the trees unbroken are over twelve feet in diameter and as only the tops show, they must have rivaled the great sequoias of California. One remarkable feature is that the bark, texture of the wood, grain, etc., are all as distinct and well preserved as if they had been taken from living trees.

"The trees, however, are not conifers; the solid rock about them shows this. Once covered with a soft green matting of grass, it received the falling leaves and seeds, and now they are found just as perfect as in life, only turned to stone. From these the botanist is enabled to determine what they were and how long ago they lived upon the earth. Lesquereux made the best examination, and pronounced them as belonging to the lower pliocene or upper miocene time of geology. They include such species as aralia, magnolia, laurus, tilia, fraxinus, cornus, populus, alnus, ferns, etc. All around this locality the same old remains of forests could be found, and the fine collections of quartz and calcite that were spread about undoubtedly were all formed in the trunks of trees. On the opposite side of the river the same condition of things was noticed, and the trunks here were, if anything still larger and more certainly higher up, as the range was by actual measurement over eleven thousand feet high and contained the stony trees to the very summit. These forests are found in various parts of the world. In Heard Island there is a cave that contains a number of extremely large trees, and in most all coal mines large trunks are found that date back millions and millions of years. In some mines terrible accidents often occur from the presence of these great trunks, as when the bottom of the trunk is cut off down shoots the stony tree upon the miner without warning. In some mines where the trees are solid they are left to support the ceiling. I have seen a tree taken from a mine at Newcastle (the Jarrow mine) that was forty feet in length and thirteen feet in diameter. It was worked out of the coal as carefully as possible, but it could not be all removed as the trunk divided at the summit into over twenty large branches. The name of this coal giant was Lepidodendron Sternbergii. Some of the ferns of this time were gigantic, and in the Philadelphia Academy of Sciences there is a fine collection, showing many specimens from all over the world.—Philadelphia Times.

Composing Under Difficulties.

In October, 1787, after his return to Vienna, Mozart produced his greatest opera, "Don Giovanni." As late as the night before the performance the overture had not been copied. Mozart wrote on until late into the night, and his wife could only keep him awake by telling him the old fairy tales, such as he loved when a child; at times he would break from laughter to tears, until, growing more and more weary, he fell asleep. At seven the next morning he arose and finished the score, the ink in some parts being scarcely dry when the copies were placed on the musicians' desks. The musicians had to play the overture at sight, but its beauties aroused the greatest enthusiasm both in the players and the audience. Mozart superintended all the rehearsals, and inspired the singers with his own ideas and feeling. He taught the hero to dance a minuet and when one of the singers failed to conquer his score, Mozart altered it on the spot. At last the Emperor bestowed a court position on Mozart, but the salary was so meager—it was less than $500—that it was of little help to him, while his duty, to compose dance music for the court, was humiliating. Well could he reply, when asked his income by the tax-gatherer, "Too much for what I do," too little for what I could do."—Agatha Tams, in St. Nicholas.

A Queer Superstition.

Abram Reed, a farmer living in Beaver township, Pa., cut down a large oak tree on his farm, and in cutting it up he found, imbedded in the trunk, seven or eight feet from the ground, a small glass bottle and what had the appearance of a lock of hair. The bottle had been inserted in a hole in the tree made by an auger, then a pine plug was driven into the hole over the bottle, the hair also being held in the hole by the plug. The bottle was corked and contained a colorless liquid. Over the plug had grown six solid rings of wood, besides a thick bark. There was a superstition among the early settlers, and it is held by many of their descendants, that asthma and other affections could be cured by the victim standing against the tree and having a lock of his hair plugged in it while the hair was still attached to his head. It must then be cut off close to his head, and the afflicted person walk away without looking at it or ever passing by the tree again. While the use of a bottle was not included in this treatment, it is believed that the one with the hair discovered in the heart of the oak tree was put there in the early days of the settlement by some believer in the superstition to cure an ailment of some kind.—Lumber World.

BAD SPELLING.

Comfort for Those Whose Memories Fail to Keep Track of the Exasperating Methods of English Spelling.

The theory is now advanced that, in addition to harrowing the soul and tormenting the spirit, our system, or rather non-system of spelling actually tends to damage the mind. Any number of persons who have been deadly foes of orthography from their infancy, and who freely confess to never spelling a word according to approved custom save by the merest accident, will approve the idea off hand without for a moment according it a twinge with the discovery of a new psychological truth. A very large part of the English writing world is firmly of the opinion that the man who devised our wretched combinations of vowels and consonants had especial instruction of the Evil One with the deliberate purpose to facilitate the population of the nether world.

It is certain the frenzied struggle of the mind to keep account of the arbitrary and illogical methods of spelling is exasperating in the extreme, and there should be no wonder if mental quality and moral rectitude suffer grievous consequences through the slips of the purely mechanical process upon which correct spelling is dependent.

English spelling is governed by no rational rules, and it is entirely a matter of memory whether an instructed person spells well or ill. Considering the number of cantankerous words there are in our language, from the simplest in ordinary use to the rarest and most complex, the strain put upon the mind to remember the order and quantity of letters requisite to a given symbol is out of all proportion to the tax upon memory of really serviceable information and fruitful ideas. We are compelled to a greater concern for the character that the significance of a word and exhaust ourselves retaining the form to the frequent sacrifice of the meaning. A letters are dry, sterile, unproductive, suggesting no thought and controlling no sentiment, the youthful mind pummeled by necessity to memorize their sound relation to various words must, without advantage, expend a great amount of vital power that should be concentrated upon the acquisition of actual knowledge. Nothing is more difficult than making logical, thoughtful, active minds good spelling apparatuses. Spelling is a purely mechanical science, in which even a strong will may count for little. It is monstrous to cram children with these meaningless combinations of confusing sounds, lying accents and silent excesses, irritating their young brains, checking their youthful imaginations by conditions they can not comprehend and which steal from them the time that might better be devoted to practical studies they would pursue with delight.

The suggestion has been made that children should first be taught to read by the phonetic process, leaving the romantic inconsistency for maturer years, a suggestion the wisdom of which has been attested by highly successful experiments in that very way. There are several phonetic systems that offer solutions to the problem, and it is not to be doubted the introduction of any one of them would be of considerable benefit in primary education. A writer for the Popular Science Monthly covers this point fully when he declares, by no means as dogmatically as it may seem, that "rational education will never flourish as it should till a reformation in the teaching of reading and spelling has been accomplished."

In plain terms this means that words should, as far as practicable, be spelled as they are pronounced. Words should be nothing more than the outlet of thought; but one would think the English compounds were fiendishly planned to bewilder and debilitate the mind, for, unless a writer plunges desparately ahead regardless of the choice of letters to the formation of a word, ideas must suffer disaster while the exact symbol is being extracted from the jumble of like surrounding signs. There is a demand for uniformity of pronunciation or difference in spelling for nine-tenths of the words in our language. It is maddening to find "bough," "cough," and "tough" sporting such wildly dissimilar sounds, and we can account for the lunacy that drove "done" so far away from "cone," "lone," "tone," "bone," or relegated "dog" and "hog" to different spheres. Neither can the rational rule be found for transposing the vowels in "receive" and "believe," for changing the final sounds of "indict" and "interdict," or for loading down a word with letters that are forever silent.

The defenders of all these monstrosities of composition as constrasted to speech make a plea for the preservation of the signs that indicate the origin of words. Who cares for the origin of words when laboring to give birth to a sentiment? Words are not esteemed for their pedigrees, but for their uses, and their usefulness depends upon the intelligent facility of their being brought into play. It is the endeavor of the mind to vent itself succinctly and clearly that gives rise to slang, and if the word reformers do not come to our rescue we will eventually build this slang into a new vernacular, and establish a language of common sense in place of the hybrid that tries by artificial sounds and superfluous parts to indicate its mixed paternity. Language has always been the supply of a demand, the medium, not the controlling power of thought, and we are constantly tending toward those terms that will most simply and most comprehensively record the phenomena of the mind. The wonder is that we have done so well mentally with such bad means as our English words. It is time to write English as she is spoken.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

—Balks of timber, artistically hollowed out, nicely packed with tobacco and cigars and neatly closed at the ends, are the latest thing out in England for smuggling purposes. One of these plugged balks recently struck a quay, was split open and inconsiderately gave away the secret of its inmost being. A still hunt for balks of timber is now the favorite pastime of English custom officers.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. Hood & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores; so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

STREET HUCKSTERS.

How the Legitimate Members of the Profession Are Undersold.

"There are honest and trustworthy street hucksters as well as dishonest ones," said a member of the profession last week, "and with most of us huckstering is as much of a regular business as storekeeping or any other occupation, and we have to preserve our reputations and keep the good opinion of our customers the same as all kinds of tradespeople. There is great rivalry, too, among regular street hucksters, and I know I have to keep my eye skinned and my wits about me to prevent being double-banked by snides who go over my route and try to undersell me and make the housekeepers think I am selling them stale truck at big prices.

"The regular hucksters go down to the wharf at a very early hour in the morning and purchase from the produce commission merchants the best and freshest truck they have and pay a good price for it and immediately go on their daily routes. The other fellows go later in the day and buy up the leavings and hawk it about the streets and at back gates as fresh truck. They can sell for less than we can, but their purchasers always get fooled.

"There has been a regular business for many years of hiring out huckster wagons. There are a number of "boss hucksters," and some of them keep twenty-five or thirty wagons. When a man wants to try his fist at huckstering he goes to one of the bosses and hires a horse and wagon. He pays from $1.75 to $2.50 per day. Sometimes they can hire a wagon that has truck to sell in it, and in that case he has to pay down the value of the truck.

"A huckster's license costs ten dollars a year for one-horse wagons, and fifteen dollars a year for two-horse wagons. Whenever a boss huckster hires out a horse and wagon he makes the man who hires it pay twenty-five cents every day to go towards the license, which the boss is supposed to pay himself. The men who hire the wagons out do not in reality pay any license for them, for they get the full or more than the full amount from the men who do the work. There are some twelve or fifteen boss hucksters in the city and they own from eight to thirty wagons each. They make considerable money and many of them are well off and own property."

"How much can a regular street huckster make a day?"

"In the summer time, if he attends to business and has a fair run of custom, all the way from two to four dollars. Hucksters do not make that much in winter time, when fruit, berries and some kinds of vegetables are out of season. Hucksters work only five days a week. Monday is the hucksters' holiday and has been for years. No fresh truck can be obtained on Monday mornings, and housekeepers generally lay in provisions enough on Saturday to last over Sunday and Monday.

"Nearly all the truck is bought of commission men, for a regular huckster knows he can always get fresh truck from them and the right kind of measure. The farmers in the market who sell truck wholesale are generally looked upon with suspicion by hucksters. The farmers do not sell by weight, but by measure, and a huckster often finds that the measure is short. There is plenty of skinning going on all around in the huckstering business, and the regular huckster has got to look out or he will find himself euchered very often.

"Summer time is the huckster's best season and I think I sell more tomatoes than anything else and they last all summer. When they are in season watermelons, cantaloupes, peaches and berries of all kinds sell very rapidly. The smallest sales are among crab-apples, grapes, pears and plums. Next to tomatoes I think I sell more corn in summer than anything else."

"How about winter?"

"Nothing sells more rapidly in winter time than apples. I sell them right along. Sweet potatoes sell well in winter and also oranges, lemons, bananas and pineapples.

"A huckster is generally hard at work from two o'clock in the morning until four o'clock in the afternoon and when that time comes my voice is husky and my throat sore from continuous yelling in streets and alleys. I commence to holler at about six o'clock in the morning and keep it up until three or four o'clock, when I am usually pretty well worn out. I never heard that there was any particular throat disease among street hucksters. My voice is always ready for the following day."—Philadelphia Times.

DIDN'T KNOW HOW.

The Loss an Arkansaw Gentleman Suffered When His Wife Was Divorced.

Colonel Wadley Higinson, of Kentucky, came to Arkansaw and rented a small farm of Major Wiley Smith. When the rent became due, Major Smith approached Colonel Higinson and said:

"Colonel, your rent is due to-day."

"I am sorry to hear that, for I like you."

"What?"

"I am sorry for I like you."

"What difference does that make?"

"Makes all the difference in the world."

"How so?"

"Because I can't pay you."

"Why?"

"Well, because I've been disappointed?"

"Financially?"

"No, not particularly."

"Crops short?"

"No."

"Been sick?"

"No, been in good health."

"Then what's the matter?"

"Wife got a divorce from me."

"What difference does that make?"

"What?"

The Major repeated the question.

"What difference does that make? Why man, you must be crazy. My wife she took care of the crop."

"What did you do?"

"What! Why, I run the farm. You fellows don't know how to raise a crop."—Arkansaw Traveler.

WAR TIME EXPEDIENTS.

Some Facts Illustrating the Proverb that "Necessity Is the Mother of Invention"—Life in the South During the War.

Perhaps, taking everything into consideration, no portion of the Confederacy "during our late unpleasantness" was so destitute of the necessaries of life as that portion lying on the Southern sea board and forming part of the States of Mississippi, Alabama and Florida. The great industries of these States, that is, that portion situated as explained above, was timber, lumber, resin, tar, pitch and turpentine. The soil is not favorable, except in favored spots, for cultivation. Consisting of vast level flats, the top soil of loam is very thin, while immediately beneath it is a heavy pipe clay, while the only vegetation that seems to thrive are the great forests of pine. These, skirting the Gulf of Mexico, following the coastline for several hundred miles, and with a breadth ranging from one to two hundred miles, form the well-known pine meadows, destined in years to come to be a prolific source of wealth to the South. Perhaps with us, who resided in this portion of the Confederacy, the first necessity, after the small supply on hand was exhausted, was salt. This was a need soon felt, and it is unnecessary to add that a pound of it soon became very precious. Old brine that had done duty until it could be used no longer was boiled down until every particle of saline matter was extracted from it, and the salt thus obtained was again in its turn used in the same manner. As the supply became scarcer and scarcer, the next method, or rather recourse, was to dig up the smoke-house and to filter water through the earth thus obtained, this in turn being subjected to the usual process of boiling in order to obtain the precious condiment. So scarce did it become as the war wore on, that when a beeve was killed, instead of salting down in barrels as at first, it became more economical to cut the flesh into thin strips and dry it in the sun. It must be confessed that beef treated in this manner is more palatable than most persons would imagine. They who lived near the coast fared somewhat better, for taking the boilers from the various saw-mills, they separated the shells from the flues, and splitting them into equal halves, a strong head of wood was fitted into the ends and thus treated they were placed over a furnace and filled with the salt water from the Gulf. Of course the business had its reverses, for sometimes the blockading squadron, attracted by the smoke, would move up and with a few shells completely demolish the salt works. The salt kettles, being made of old boilers, were too heavy for the enemy to carry off, and as no damage beyond knocking out the wooden heads could be inflicted, the salt manufacturers would, with indefatigable energy when the hostile fleet removed to a safe distance, gather up the debris, make a few repairs and recommence boiling.

The ingenuity of the people was to replace the various articles of clothing and the different domestic luxuries. Old dressess, old coats were turned and made over, remodeled and cut down. The writer remembers well what a pang of envy was awakened within his bosom going to a ball one night to find that the attentions of the fair ones were all bestowed on an acquaintance who made his advent that evening in a bright, spick, span new pair of pantaloons, made of new ticking, with broad, blue stripes, cut bias.

Perhaps the easiest problem for us to solve amid our various troubles was that of making hats. Fortunately the supply of palmetto in our Southern swamps is in a manner speaking inexhaustible, and from this source we were soon compelled by the course of events to draw our supply of hats. We soon learned to improve upon the first rude models, and when the war was brought to a close some of the ladies, especially, had acquired taste and proficiency. The palmetto hats they made would not have reflected discredit upon a fashionable hatter. The heart of the palmetto is generally selected as being still held together, and not being sprouted out and unfolded into the fan-shaped leaf so familiar to travelers in the South. While in this condition the folds lie one upon another, and are perfectly white and pliable. After being severed from the main trunk it is opened out and hung in the shade to dry. About a week's drying suffices to prepare it for use. It is now separated, each fold from the other, and cut into convenient lengths, then divided into little strips about an eighth of an inch in width, and these in turn plaited or braided together into one continuous braid until of sufficient length to make the hat. The hat itself was always commenced from the center of the crown by sewing the braid together in slightly overlapping circles. The rim, as a finishing touch, was generally bound with a braid.

Keenly felt was the need of ammunition. Owing to the stringency of the blockade it soon became almost impossible to obtain either powder or lead. The latter was the first to give out, and in order to supply this need all the machinery was taken apart and all the old boxes, fillings, etc., were put to a new use—converted into shot. As there were no shot towers the favorite method was to climb the tallest tree one could find, melt the lead as well as we could in the top and let the liquid metal drop into a tub of cold water beneath. The result thus obtained would scarcely have awakened envy on the part of some of our modern shot manufacturers, but in the language of an old "mossback" who was compelled to resort to this expedient, "it beat nothing all holler."—Detroit Free Press.

Pauline Markham is the name of the actress who once gave a time-honored horsewhipped Wilbur F. Story, of the Chicago Times.

We clip the following from a late number of the Evening Wisconsin.

Spalding Bros., 119 Wisconsin Street, are agents for the sale in Milwaukee of two admirable examples of photography, published by Root & Tinker, of New York. One sheet contains affine and artistic portraits of the commanders-in-chief of the G. A. R. The other bears a representation of the Bartholdi statue. The latter is taken from the original design and a percentage of the money received from its sale will be turned in to the pedestal fund. Both pictures are highly artistic. They sell for the moderate price of $1 each.

We acknowledge the receipt of one of these pictures from Harry Spalding. It is a very fine engraving.

A PLEASANT RECEPTION

We clip the following item from a late number of the Monroe County Mail. Our readers will remember Mrs. Burns was formerly Miss Allie M. Collins, of Macon, who has but recently become Mrs. Burns. The bride's many friends in this vicinity will be glad to learn of her hearty reception in her new home.

Rev. W. C. Burns and bride arrived Saturday evening. Tuesday evening, in spite of the rain, large numbers of their parishioners and other friends of Mr. Burns gathered at the home of Mrs. McMillan, to welcome them home. Mrs. Burns at once won the regard of all who conversed with her, and is a pleasant appearing lady, whose face indicates all the good sense, good judgment, and self forgetfulness required to perform the varied and sometimes perplexing and embarassing duties which fall to the lot of a pastor's wife, and their congratulations showed of how much more sincere. The members of the society presented her with a handsome decorated porcelain dinner set, of 124 pieces. The design is modest and artistic, and the effect very pleasing, reflecting much credit upon Miss Grace Green, who made the selection. Miss Green in a few well chosen words presented to Mr. Burns an easy chair, tastily made of willow, grasses, etc., Mr. Chas. Butler on behalf of the Good Templars presented an easel and engraving. After partaking of refreshments the guests dispersed.

A FAREWELL SERVICE.

The relations of the three churches on Chicago street, Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist, are fraternal in their charm for being made more so by their close proximity with each other. An unusual occurrence has just happened in their history. The pastors of two of these churches, Methodist and Baptist, have just finished their labors in Tecumseh to leave for other fields. Having said farewell to their own people a cordial invitation was extended and accepted to hold union service in the Presbyterian church, preparatory to their final departure, that the members of all the three churches might have opportunity to bid the departing ones, God speed, together. This farewell service was held last Sabbath night. The large audience room of the Presbyterian church was completely filled. The pastor of that church presided and after devotional exercises made an address expressing his feelings of respect and christian regard for the brethren who were leaving, and the pleasure it had been to him to labor beside them. After a congregational hymn and prayer by Rev. Mr. Vincent the audience were addressed by Rev. Mr. Hudson of the Methodist church, who paid a handsome tribute to the members of his own congregation and also those of the others represented in the gathering. They were pleasant, happy years, he said, he had been permitted to spend in this place.

Rev. Mr. Conley, of the Baptist church, followed Mr. Hudson in remarks of a similar spirit. The parting with his people was rendered even more painful from the fact that he had ministered to them for seven years and more. As he was only going to Detroit, he hoped to see again from time to time those whom he was now leaving. The effect of the meeting was excellent. It increased the feeling of christian unity already existing and the opinion was expressed by many who were present that it was a good thing it had been held.

The Rev. Mr. Hudson was to leave yesterday for Hancock, Michigan, his new home, by way of Detroit and the lakes. Rev. Mr. Conley leaves to fill his new pulpit in Detroit, next Saturday, and his family will go early next week.

THE FARMER'S OPPORTUNITY

The farmer's life should be the most independent one, especially in this country, where land is cheap and taxes low. He produces what mankind consumes. His gains come from the surplus over and above what he requires for his own needs. If his surplus costs him more to produce than he can obtain for it, he is the loser, just as the merchant or manufacturer would be under similar conditions. It is often the case that a conspiracy is formed among the "middlemen" to obtain the farmer's surplus at a lower price than it costs him to produce it. In the war of interests between the producer and consumer, when agricultural products are abundant, the farmer is apt to get the worst of it—the price advances after the grain has passed into the hands of the middlemen. This was notably the case in 1883 and 1884, when the farmers of the Northwest received but 40 to 50 cents a bushel for their wheat which means an absolute loss to the raiser. For the first time since 1881 the farmer is to-day the master of the situation, and it is his own fault if he does not make the most of it. If he will hold his wheat at $1 at the station he will get his price, and by selling half as much as he did last year he will receive more money for its sales and still have some wheat left to carry over to another year. One reason for this statement is that our wheat crop for this year is short. The winter wheat is not more than half a crop, and the spring wheat is reported as damaged one third. The Government report for July, which does not include the damage to spring wheat it having taken place to a large extent since the report was prepared, places the entire yield of the United States for 1885 at 357,000,000 bushels. In 1884 the Government report placed the yield at 512,000,000, with 40,000,000 on hand from the crop of 1883. Add these amounts together and we will learn the total amount of wheat that this country has had during the last two years:

From old crop, at the beginning of the harvest of 1884	40,000,000
Total yield of 1884	512,000,000
Total yield of 1885 (including nothing for spring wheat damage)	357,000,000
Total for two years	909,000,000

Deduct from this total of 909,000,000 the amount required for home consumption and for seed, namely, 700,000,000 for two years, and the 132,000,000 exported last year, and we have remaining for export and for carrying over but 77,000,000.

For home consumption, 1884	300,000,000
For seed, 1884	50,000,000
Exported	132,000,000
For home consumption, 1885	300,000,000
For seed, 1885	50,000,000
Total	832,000,000
Total amount of wheat for '84 and '85	909,000,000
Consumption, seed, and export	832,000,000
For export and to carry over 1885	77,000,000

Therefore, if we export half as much wheat as we did last year, we shall not have a bushel left at the beginning of the harvest of 1886, and, should the crop of 1886 be no larger than the crop of 1885, we should be importing wheat within eighteen months, and it would be selling at famine prices. In 1883 we imported wheat; in 1885 we again imported wheat, besides bringing it across the Isthmus from California, and it sold at $4 per bushel in New York. In 1881, on the short crop, wheat sold at $1.40 in Chicago and at $1.60 in New York. The question now naturally arises as to whether the foreign demand is likely to be decreased or whether it will be large. There is no country in the world that has a full average crop, and many countries fall far below the average. France and England have greatly reduced their acreage by turning their wheat fields into pastures for sheep and cattle thereby realizing better profits than they could from raising wheat which in the years 1884 and 1885 sold at a lower price than in 100 years. England's acreage is decreased from 3,000,000 to 2,000,000 bushels, and France 35,000,000 on acreage alone. Besides the decrease of acreage the Mark Lane Express of July 25 says: "Broadly speaking, nothing is good now that has not obtained a good start before May set in, whether the land is good, bad, or indifferent. Each district appears to have had a season of its own, but the really punishing drought seems to have been confined to the southwestern districts." On Aug. 3 the same paper says: "As the crops ripen, reports on the probable yield become less and less hopeful. Even the wheat crop has suffered by the severity of the drought and the hot sun. Even from Essex and other countries where the crops were supposed to be splendid the latter reports are less and less favorable than the early ones have been. The wheats are said to be badly blighted, and the barley also. The harvests will not be as good by 30 per cent. as they were supposed to be a month ago. The wheats are causing doubts to growers; much of the spring sown grain is absolutely perishing from drought." Referring to the forcing weather for crops, the same London paper says: "This very rapid maturing of the wheat crop has been attended by a great deal of waste in its apparent weight, and while some districts are still reported favorable to an unusual degree, there is a growing opinion that it will on the whole fall short of the general expectation. The weather for July was unexceptionally favorable for the normal requirements of wheat in that month, but the mischief done in May and June was to an extent not then realized, but is now becoming apparent." France will be about 35,000,000 short on acreage alone, for the same reason that the farmers have turned their wheat lands into pasturage. The Mark Lane Express says of the growing crops of that country: "Further advices from the southwestern part of France mention that threshing reveals unexpected deficiencies in the wheat, attributed to great growth of weeds and an unfavorable season. Even in some parts of the Garonne Basin, the yield is said to be one-fourth below that of 1884. In the east the farmers appear satisfied with the results of the threshing; but in the northeast a deficiency of an eighth is reported. The centre is under average, and the west and northwest better."

The London Miller says: "The English potato crop is considered a failure. France is expecting a short crop of wheat, while accounts from southern Russia show little to spare in that quarter." Russia's shortage from drought and blight is reported as anywhere from 50,000,000 to 100,000,000. The loss of the crops in Russia have advanced gold to a premium of 15 to 20 per cent, already in southern Russia. Again, the rye crop of Russia, Germany, Austria and Prussia is fearfully damaged. If our foreign news is true, the shortage in breadstuffs in England, France, Germany and America is nearly 500,000,000 bushels, for in Russia and Germany rye forms the staple food, as wheat does in this country. Now, with the fact of this shortage in foreign countries, it is very poor policy for the American farmer to part with his wheat at the prevailing low prices, when there is certain to be a scarcity of wheat within twelve months. The short of 1881 made money for the farmer who held his wheat and for the speculator who bought. The losers were the farmers who rushed their wheat to market and the bears who sold "short." In 1883 and 1884 the crops were abundant. The farmers had more wheat than they needed for home consumption or for foreign demand. Hence the large supply of wheat on hand. The wheat in sight amounts to say 40,000,000 bushels at all points. This 40,000,000 bushels is the great bugbear. The press of the country, with but few exceptions, has been loud in its advice to the farmers to sell their wheat at any price. It points to the 40,000,000 bushels in sight and harps on the fact that the foreigners are not taking any of our wheat. It will be a blessing if the foreigners continue "not to take any of our wheat" at these prices. If the farmers are willing to give their wheat away it had better be to our own countrymen, for if it goes abroad we shall have to buy it back at higher rates. When a merchant has a large stock of goods on hand at low prices, and he finds that the mills which produced the goods have been destroyed, rendering their production in possible for twelve months, he is in no hurry to dispose of his accumulation at the low rates he purchased them at. He keeps them for a rise. So when the farmer understands that there is not enough wheat to go around, and that no more can be produced for twelve months, he should be in no hurry to part with his supply at present low prices. By waiting he will get his own price for it. Nor should he be disturbed over the fact that the foreigners cannot see behind our "40,000,000 in sight." England has become so accustomed to buying of us from hand to mouth by cable, and having the wheat delivered on her shores within thirty days, that she does not realize that a shortage in our crops means "no more wheat at these prices" for her. The farmers of the United Kingdom and France, by holding their wheat sixty days, will find that the "lowest price in a hundred years" is a thing of the past. They can get 45s. to 50s. for their wheat, instead of 32s. to 36s. that they are now receiving, if they will have a little patience. The amount on passage is rapidly diminishing, and the home supplies will soon be sought after at better prices.

Of all the farmer's possessions to-day not one promises so great and speedy a return as his wheat. He can sell his farm and buy it back next year for the same or less money. He can sell his cattle, hogs, or horses, and replace them next spring for perhaps less money. His wheat will never be worth any less until at least two large crops in succession, have been harvested, and before that time it is likely to greatly increase in value. It is for our spring wheat farmers to make the prices for the world's wheat markets. The winter wheat farmers have none to spare. This is especially true of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Kansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee, whose crops are disastrous, except in the northern portions of Ohio and Indiana. Michigan and Oregon are the only winter wheat States that have raised good crops this year. This is the "golden egg" year for the farmer of these sections, for he will be likely to make up the losses he sustained last year by holding his present crop for later delivery at good prices. During the last fortnight Indiana shipped wheat to St. Louis, and Baltimore has shipped wheat to Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Ohio for milling purposes. The short crop of wheat is a greater calamity to this country than is yet realized. If the shortage approaches the figures that the State statisticians give, namely, 200,000,000 bushels, it means $200,000,000 loss to the United States, considering wheat at but $1 per bushel. Through the foregoing I have adopted the Government figures, although they are not always infallible. They varied their wheat report 40,000,000 last year, and their estimates of the corn crop of 1881 varied 400,000,000 between June and December. It is probable that when they understand the damage to the spring wheat crop they will lower their estimate for the wheat yield from 357,000,000 to nearer 300,000,000. Of the large crop of 1884 the visible supply in the United States increased 28,000,000 from Aug. 1 to Dec. 31, or at the rate of 1,280,000 per week.

The receipts of winter wheat at all the principal sea board and interior points from July 1 to Aug. 15, 1885, as compared with 1884, are as follows:

July, 1884	13,634,000
Aug. 1 to 15, 1884	11,441,000
Total	25,075,000
July, 1885	5,430,000
Aug. 1 to 15, 1885	5,010,000
Total	10,440,000
1884, total	25,075,000
1885, total	10,440,000
Decrease	14,635,000

These are figures that the farmer would do well to ponder over. There cannot be an overproduction of what man and beast require for food. If the farmer has more than he can sell profitably one year, if he will keep it in store, another year will create a demand for it either by home or foreign shortage.—New York Sun.

The October number of Demorest's Monthly Magazine is, as usual, very entertaining and instructive. As a family magazine it is worthy of honorable mention. The present number is filled with readable articles, among which are "Three Days at Chamonnix," "The Poet Milton," and "Rambles About Crieff." All the articles devoted to fashion and the adornment of home are very suggestive, and the stories, poems, and various departments furnish agreeable and instructive reading. There are some good illustrations, and the frontispiece is a fine steel engraving. This number completes Vol. XXI.

The hotel runners got hold of the wrong man last week on the L. S. & M. S. road. While riding up from the depot they tackled T. J. Charlsworth, Supt. of the Detroit division, and it is a noticeable fact that they have'nt rode up from the depot to the crossing to work the train since then.

Hon. John J. Adam yesterday received a letter from Cassopolis announcing the death of J. H. Patterson, in his 85th year. Mr. Patterson was one of the few surviving members of the first Constitutional Convention. So far as Mr. Adam's knowledge extends, there are but three members of that convention now living.

Grange Fair.

The Macon Grange will hold a fair at their hall on Friday evening, Oct. 9th. It is hoped that all the members will be present, and it is expected that all will bring exhibits of fruits, vegetables, &c. Speaking by J. W. Baker, Dr. Howell and others. A general invitation is extended.

BIG HITS FOR BANKER.

Several of Banker Rothchild's colts were on exhibition at the county fair last week, and they drew six first premiums. His colts won in the 2-year old, 3-year old and 4-year old speed classes.

The 2-year old "Frank S" trotted in 3:05.

The 3-year old "Don Rothchild" trotted in 3:10.

The 4-year old "Bingo Rothchild" trotted in 2:50.

Mr. Oscar Doolittle, of Adrian, who acted as starter at the races last week is a great admirer of Hambletonian stock. After the races were over he called the audience to order and said, "that 2-year old "Frank S" is the finest, the speediest and the best colt ever shown in Lenawee County."

Mr. Frank Silvers, the owner of Banker, is considerably elated at the splendid show which Banker's colts made at the county fair, and he has good reason to be.

As Mike Wilson was turning the corner near E. G. Cook's last Tuesday afternoon with a load of hay, the load upset and Mr. Wilson was thrown violently to the ground. His hip was badly bruised, but luckily no bones were broken. Dr. Jones is attending upon him and he is doing as well as could be expected.

Mrs. E. C. Coryell departed this life on Saturday last and the funeral rites were held on Monday. The deceased was a woman of most estimable qualities of mind and heart, who had the faculty of making friends with all, and her death will be sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends. A befitting obituary notice will appear in these columns next week.

Benj. Swan, after a sojourn of about three months in Tecumseh, started for his home in Florida, last Monday. His business affairs have all been satisfactorily settled up, and he leaves Tecumseh without a dollar standing against him. All his means are now invested in his Florida property, and he will make that state his permanent home hereafter. That he will prosper in his new location we have no reason to doubt.

Lucius Lilley Esq., returned yesterday from a trip of one week out west. He left home on Tuesday of last week and went directly to Chicago. There he remained three or four days in attendance upon the Banker's Convention. At the close he went with a delegation of bankers to Pullman and from thence to St. Paul and Minneapolis, stopping one day in each city. Although the trip was to a certain extent a business one and undertaken for business purposes, yet it afforded him much recreation, and he enjoyed the entire week's absence from home exceedingly well.

Uncle Tom's Cabin is coming.

T. M. Hunter, of Adrian, was in town last Saturday.

Mrs. John Hadwin, of Marshal, and Mrs. Phillips, of Burlington, are visiting friends in Tecumseh and Britton.

Alba Heywood, Tecumseh's favorite, is soon to give an entertainment in the Opera House. Look out for the date.

Three orchestras have lately been organized in the village, and three or four vocal quartettes. When and where is this thing going to stop?

At the county fair last week James Boyd's colt took the first premiun in the 2 year old race and Bert Garlinghouse's colt captured the second premium in the 3 year old race.

P. W. Adams started for his home in Delaware last Monday. His sojourn of three weeks in Tecumseh was a very enjoyable one. His enthusiastic description of the Delaware soil and climate have given some of our citizens the Delaware fever.

Editor Stearns, of the Adrian is very particular. When he takes a cord of elm wood on subscription he wants a cord. He finds there is a great difference sometimes between a cord of wood and a load of wood. We know how it is ourselves, for we've been there.

Mr. L. R. Gainsley has rented the store between Satterthwaite's hardware and Hough & Hosmer's, which he is filling with a fine stock of Dry Goods. The opening will take place on Monday next, Oct. 5th. C. H. Gainsley will have charge of the store. We call attention to their business announcement which appears elsewhere.

The C. L. S. C. met at the office of Dr. R. B. House last Saturday evening when the following officers were chosen for the coming term.

President—Mrs. Fred Rosacrans.
Vice Pres.—Mrs. G. D. Perry.
Secretary—Miss Grace Parkhurst.

There are now 25 members in the circle. It will hold its regular meetings on the 2nd and 4th Monday evenings of each month at Dr. House's office.

Mr. G. P. Sparks is having his store enlarged this week by connecting the large room South of his present room with the latter, which will nearly double the storage capacity of his store. He will put in at once a large additional stock of both musical instruments and sewing machines and will carry the most complete assortment of goods in that line ever shown in this section of the state. We hope to see Mr. Sparks reap a largely increased trade to compensate him for his enterprise.

Last Monday, Sept. 28th, the Detroit Free Press, completed the first half century of its existence and it signalized the event by publishing a sixteen page paper, containing a lengthy historical sketch of the enterprise during those fifty years. The Free Press, like most newspapers, has seen its ups and downs, its seasons of adversity as well as prosperity, but it has weathered five fires and a good many financial gales, and is now one of the strongest and wealthiest newspaper establishments in the Northwest. By common consent it stands at the very head of Michigan journalism, and its reputation is as broad as the continent. Business energy, fidelity to the profession and editorial ability have wrought out in the Free Press a model newspaper. Here is our heartiest congratulations, accompanied with the sincere wish that its second fifty years may rival its first.

The medical attachment of the Tecumseh News, who formerly served on the New York Tribune and who now peddles pills in Clinton, has broken out again. In last weeks News he has this item:

The great unknown of the Tecumseh Herald has at last had to come to the surface to breathe, and by putting his head above water has been discovered. If anyone desires to know who this "old respected citizen of Clinton" is, he can do so by ascertaining who had the refusal of the brick house on Jackson street until the 10th of October.

Upon inquiry, we learn that the citizen who had the refusal of the brick house on Jackson street was Ed. VanDeMark. Now, Mr. VanDeMark would doubtless make a good newspaper correspondent and he would doubtless be willing to serve the HERALD in that capacity, but the fact is that Mr. VanDeMark is not now and never has been the HERALD correspondent. If the medical editor were as truthful in his statements as he is prolific, he might develop into a fair correspondent himself, in time.

Will Harding, of Albion College, is in town this week.

Geo. S. Field went to Chicago Tuesday for a short visit.

Topsy and Uncle Tom at the Opera House to-morrow night.

C. A. Slayton, of this village, is buying apples for the Hause Bros. of Clinton.

The Raisin Pioneers hold their reunion to-day at the Presbyterian church in that township.

Mr. and Mrs. Lafayette Tillipaugh, of Hudson, were the guests of Henry Brown over Sunday last.

The theatrical season will open at the Opera House on Monday evening, Oct. 5th with "Dolly's Luck."

The Williamson Bros. have shipped 2,000 barrels of eggs since they bought out Frank Bumann last spring.

Benj. Shepard, of Ontario, Co., N. Y., father of Mrs. Frank Silvers, has been spending a few days in Tecumseh.

Mrs. Abner Wilson has been quite ill for several days, but she is now on the mend and will be out of the Doctors care soon.

Geo. S. Tiffany and Truman McKinney are attending the Indiana state fair at Indianapolis this week with their new clay crusher.

Frank VanDyne, of Manchester, was manipulating the L. S. & M. S. telegraph instrument last Saturday, in the absence of Newberry on the excursion to Detroit.

Buel Johnson, who lives two miles northwest of Clinton is building a large grain barn, with a basement. When completed it will be one of the best barns in that section.

The two rooms in the new engine house occupied by the hose companies are being furnished this week in fine shape. The boys will have a nobby suite of rooms when finished.

Those who have never seen Uncle Tom's Cabin should avail themselves of the opportunity to-morrow evening. Those who have seen it should go again. Uncle Tom and Topsey never grow old.

B. F. Lamkins, of Franklin, a graduate of the Tecumseh High School, has entered the law department of the University at Ann Arbor. We heartily wish him success and believe he will attain it.

The young men of the village (with their best girls) will indulge in a hop at Armory Hall this evening. They are hopping around pretty lively this week perfecting arrangements to have a hopping good time.

We have received a copy of the inaugural address of Edwin Willits, President of the state Agricultural college, which was delivered Aug. 19, last. It is an able and admirable address and deserves general perusal.

Frank L. Osborn, an old Tecumseh boy, who has been stationed over the M. E. church at Fairfield during the past year, has been transferred to Unionville, Tuscola Co. He will preach his first sermon there next Sunday.

"Consideration for the Faults of Others," will be the subject of the sermon for the morning at the Universalist church, followed by communion service. "The Profit of Labor" for the evening. Sunday School at 12:45. All welcomed to each service.

Mrs. Simpson T. Clark, of Hillsdale, has been spending a few days in Tecumseh as the guest of Thomas Cummins and Burritt Allen. She returned home Tuesday. Mr. Clark's old friends here will be glad to learn that he is located on a farm near Hillsdale and is prospering.

Geo. S. Tiffany has lately gotten up a new clay crushing machine which he calls the "Success Crusher." The machine is founded upon patents issued to Truman McKinney and Walter Soper of this village in January, with some patented improvements lately made by Mr. Tiffany. Mr. Tiffany is now making arrangements to manufacture the machine and put it upon the market.

CHURCH REPAIRS.

The repairs on the Baptist Church are now nearly completed and the church will probably be occupied next Sunday, at all events on the Sunday following. The repairs will add very much to the comfort and convenience of the church property. The session room has been remodeled and improved the kitchen enlarged, and the parlor in the second story of the rear addition nearly doubled in size. The main audience room has been frescoed anew and it is certainly no exaggeration to say that it is the most artistic job of frescoing that has thus far been executed in this village. The room will be lighted by two large reflectors attached to the ceiling which will give an abundance of light and far superior to the old lamps. The pews and casings have been revarnished and the carpet and cushions thoroughly cleaned and replaced. The entire expense of the improvements will amount to several hundred dollars, but the sum will be soon forthcoming to liquidate all indebtedness. Our Baptist friends are now provided with one of the neatest and most convenient church edifices in Tecumseh and they deserve it.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

Hudson has a Carleton circle.

The Morenci fair comes off this week.

The Tri-State fair sunk about $2,500 this year.

The automatic rug machine company have fitted up a fine office at Morenci.

The Morenci Observer will publish a daily this week during three days of the fair.

The Adrian Light Guard made $250 out of their excursion last Saturday. A good lift for the boys.

The Baptist church of Morenci have rented an eating house on the fair grounds and will provide the visitors at the fair with cold water and wittles.

Postmaster Southworth of Hudson, has resigned and Col. Eldredge has forwarded the name of his successor. Who the lucky man will be however, no fellow can find out.

The editor of the Hudson Gazette rejoices in the possession of a cane made by a native Zulu of Africa, which was lately presented to him. Bro. Schermerhorn is already commencing preparations for next year's press excursion.

Ex-supervisor Bradner, of Clinton, has raised a mushroom on his farm that measures forty five inches in circumference and weighs over eight pounds. He has a large farm but there isn't room for many such mushrooms on the place.

Editor Beakes, of the Record, carries a beautiful pearl-mounted revolver about his person constantly, and is always ready to be interviewed by the fellow who wants to see the editor. The weapon is worn on his watch charm, and is conveniently handy.—Adrian Press.

On complaint of Oliver Wadsworth, Chris. Schmidt, was arrested Monday, on the charge of keeping his saloon open on Sunday. The trial was to have come off on Tuesday afternoon, but the proceedings were quashed on some irregularities in the papers.—Clinton Local.

The habit of young Tecumsehites of standing in the entrances, just outside of the droppings of the sanctuaries, and grabbing for the girls when they come out, has become so pestiferous that the church committees have united in threatening a prosecution of the offenders.—Adrian Record.

The Observer is urging the young people of that town to organize a literary society. Yes, the questions of capital punishment, whether Washington or Napoleon was the greater general, whether realization gives more pleasure than anticipation, ought to be settled definitely as early as possible.

Quite a number of Hudson people who intended to take in the Adrian fair last Wednesday did not go according to program. The morning train was abandoned owing to an accident four miles east of Elkhart, where a broken rail caused the engine and seven cars to be ditched. No one was injured, although one car had thirty passengers aboard. A miraculous escape.—Hudson Post.

Aaron Tufts, of Seneca Lenawee county, declines office. He has been 31 years treasurer of his school district, and the people thought he better keep right on, but he concluded that the honors ought to be distributed a bit more evenly, and that some one else should handle the money, before they should forget how it was done. It is unnecessary to say that the district has never found a penny missing in this 31 years of faithful service.

Lenawee county's celebrated artist, Verne Wheeler, of Tecumseh, has been taking some more stereoscopic views of Devil's lake, and has handed THE GAZETTE a number of them, with his compliments. They were photographed during the G. A. R. encampment, and embrace many of the most beautiful scenes on the northeast side of the lake. Mr. Wheeler will photograph some residences in this locality this week. We will say to any of our people desiring anything in his line, that they cannot find a more thorough and competent artist.—Hudson Gazette.

Toledo is making strenuous efforts to have some of its capitalists invest a part of their money in prospecting for natural gas, and we believe preparations for boring has been commenced. A large well was struck at Fremont, O., a few days ago, while at Bowling Green two wells supply the town for all lighting and heating purposes. Several years ago some efforts in boring for gas were made in this village, but no one was found to assume the risk of possible failure. Talk upon the subject is now again revived. Unloubtedly large quantities of gas is confined beneath the surface of the earth in this vicinity, the only question being how deep? Wells sunk anywhere around us to any depth, are found to contain more or less gas, some even being unfit to use on that account. The advantages to be derived, even by a village like ours, are painly apparent. Who will invest a little surplus wealth, and experiment?—Blissfield Advance.

R. B. Titus has his hands full now. He runs two farms in Raisin, comprising over 200 acres.

Cecil Clark's saw mill in the town of Raisin burned to the ground at two o'clock last Sunday morning. This is the tenth time during the last twenty years that Mr. Clark's mill has gone up in smoke. The event comes around about once in two years as regularly as a Dakota cyclone, or an Ohio election. We presume he will rebuild again. He always does.

Fred Fay is known to many of our citizens as one of the most popular conductors on the M. & O. road. It becomes our pleasant duty to announce that he was married on Sunday, Sept. 20th, to Miss Lillian A. Whiteman of Bryan, Ohio. The ceremony was performed at the residence of Mr. Fay's father in Fenton, Michigan. The parties will soon take up their residence at Battle Creek where Mrs. Fay has a fine residence of her own. Fred's many friends along the line of the road will congratulate him on his good fortune and extend their heartiest wishes for his future prosperity.

The Whitney Family will give an entertainment in Tecumseh on Wednesday evening of next week, Oct. 7. There are three troops combined in one. The program consists of fun, music, sensation and comedy. Admission only twenty-five cents.

The Grass Lake News says:

"The entertainment given by the Whitney Family, Tuesday evening, under the management of Yankee F. Locke, was well patronized; the seating capacity of their tent being all taken up (except a few of the reserved chairs.) The entertainment was sufficiently varied to keep up the interest throughout, and all seemed well pleased with the performance. The trapeze performance and tumbling was particularly fine, the minstrelsy mirth-provoking, and the music pleasing. It seems to be the aim of the management to do all they promise, and to leave a good impression by their courteous and gentlemanly conduct."

REV. MR. CONLEY'S DEPARTURE.

Rev. C. E. Conley preached his farewell discourse last Sunday morning. For seven years and five months he has filled the pastorate of the Baptist Church of this village, and he now bids Tecumseh farewell and seeks a wider field of labor in Detroit. He and the church have both prospered during his residence among us. The church has increased largely in membership, in wealth, in christian zeal and work during his pastorate. During his pastorate here there have been about 150 accessions to the church. Something over $4500 have been raised for benevolence, besides paying all the running expenses of the church. Permanent improvements have been put on the church property to the amount of about $3,000. Mr. Conley has made an admirable record during his pastorate in Tecumseh. Not only his own church but the community at large will deeply regret his departure, for he had welded many links of personal friendship outside of his own communion. He begins his labors next Sunday as pastor of the Clinton Ave. Baptist Church of Detroit. This is the best Baptist meeting house in the city save one and is the center of a population of about 40,000. The field is a large one, but we believe the new shepherd will prove himself adequate to the needs of his flock. The kindest wishes and prayers for his success will accompany Bro. Conley to his city pastorate.

A WOMAN'S "NO."

She said a parson, young and moral,
Courted a lady at church last summer.
Employed as an auditor, sound,
To take it from her.

She looked me with a grave, sweet smile,
As sweet as rose in perfumed moisture;
If she spoke, I was not worth a mile
To let me take it.

And so I offered, as before,
Only that she might be relieved by me.
She said no, and I say no more.
Though it nearly grieved her.

Proposed to plead—she turned heavenward
The immaculate soul—and finally consented.
And so, leaning on my arm, we went
To where she boarded.

But when upon the stairs she stood,
And I, upon the hall, with my hat in hand,
Since, politely, in a tremulous mood
And softly, she said:

As she spoke the light of her throat,
And—it may be mere fancy—I thought
I detected there a quivering
For not meeting.

PUNS IN LITERATURE.

Good Authority for Declaring Punning Good Writing.

The Species of Wit Which Flourished During the Golden Age of English Literature—Some Notable Examples.

"Aristotle, in the eleventh chapter of his 'Rhetoric' describes two or three kinds of puns, which he calls paronomasia, among the beauties of good writing, and produces instances of them out of some of the greatest authors in the Greek tongue." "Cicero," he goes on to observe, "has sprinkled several of his works with puns, and in his book where he lays down the rules of oratory, he quotes abundance of sayings, as pieces of wit, which also, upon examination, prove arrant puns."

The age in which this species of wit chiefly flourished in England was the reign of King James the First. His Majesty was a toderable punster, and the taste of the sovereign was studied by the courtiers and by the clergy. The greatest authors in their most serious works made frequent use of puns, and even in the pulpit they were not uncommon. Punning was used under all circumstances—serious as well as trivial matters were infected with it. This vice, as some will consider it, extended itself everywhere. Indeed, it spread to so dreadful a degree that it was as freely used in the court of justice and the church as anywhere else. The criminal, when conducted to death, received his sentence in a mixture of gravity and puns, and the preacher, the more strongly, perhaps, to impress his doctrine, played on the words as he went along. The following sentence occurs in a sermon from the pulpit: "The word shows that we must die all; yet, nevertheless, all houses are turned into ale-houses; our cares into cakes, our paradise is a pair o' dice; our marriage a merry age; our matrimony a matter o' money; our dreams have become dry wines—it was not so even in the days of Noah, Ah-me."

In the clever paper in the "Guardian," No. 32, entitled, "A Modest Apology for Punning," is drawn the distinction between the extemporaneous puns of conversation and the deliberate and grave use of this species of false wit in general composition. While defending the puns as a means of enlivening the dull wits of those engaged in common conversation, the writer, nevertheless, admits: "I look upon premeditated quibbles and puns committed to the press as unpardonable crimes. There is as much difference, betwixt these and the starts in common discourse as betwixt casual homicides and murder with malice prepense."

The greatest authors in their most serious works made frequent use of puns. The sermons of Bishop Andrews and the tragedies of Shakespeare are full of them. In the latter nothing is more usual than to see a hero weeping and quibbling for a dozen lines together. Butler, who was greatly taken with Bishop Andrew's style, affirms that he was an inimitable preacher in this way, in an anecdote which he tells with the view of showing how difficult or possible it was for those who attempted to copy him with success. But Butler unconsciously records a severe and, at the same time, well-deserved condemnation of the manner of writing which he so much admires. "Pious and pleasant Bishop Felton," says he, "his contemporary and colleague, endeavored in vain to imitate his sermons, to assimilate his style, and therefore said merrily for himself: 'I had almost marred my own natural trot by endeavoring to imitate his artificial amble.'"

There is no kind of false wit, says Addison, which has been so recommended by the practice of all ages as that which consists in a jangle of words and is comprehended under the general name of punning. It is, indeed, impossible to kill a weed which the soil has a natural disposition to produce. The seeds of punning are in the minds of all men, and though they may be subdued by reason, reflection and good sense, they be very apt to shoot up in the greatest genius that is not broken and cultivated by the rules of art.

Punsters, in the opinion of Steele, very much contribute towards the sardonic laugh, and the extremes of either wit or folly seldom fail of raising this noisy kind of applause. "As the ancient physician held the sardonic laugh very beneficial to the lungs, I should, methinks, advise all my countrymen of consumptive and hectical constitution to associate with the most facetious punsters of the age."

We will give two or three examples of these slippery fellows, who, to use a modern phrase, have succeeded in driving a coach-and-six through Addison's act, as to the non-translatability of puns.

The lectures of a Greek philosopher were attended by a young girl of exquisite beauty. One day a grain of sand happened to get into her eye, and, being unable to extricate it herself, she requested his assistance. As he was observed to perform this little operation with a zeal which, perhaps, a less sparkling eye might not have commanded, somebody called to him in Greek, "Do not spoil the pearl!"

A punster, being requested to give a specimen of his art, asked for a subject. "The King!" "The King is not a subject," he replied. This holds good in French likewise—Le Roi n'est pas un sujet.

The last case belongs to a class which is, perhaps, more extensive than is commonly supposed, where the two senses of the word are allied by an easy metaphor, and may consequently be found in more than one language. We give another of the same kind.

Erskine was reproached with his propensity to punning, and was told that puns were the lowest kind of wit. "True," said he, "and therefore they are the foundation of wit."

Madame de Lamotte was condemned to be marked with a hot iron on both shoulders, as well as to a perpetual imprisonment, for her fraud in the affair of Marie Antoinette's diamond necklace. At the end of ten months, however, she made her escape from L'Hospital, where she was confined, by the aid of a sister, who said, when quitting her, "Adieu, Madame, prenez garde le nous faire remarquer." (Farewell, madame, take care not to be remarked.)

At a time when public affairs were in a very unsettled state in France, M. de G——, who squinted terribly, asked Talleyrand how things were going on. "Mais, comme vous voyez, Monsieur." (Why, as you see, sir.)

Many of the notable punsters were dramatic writers or professional comedians, and a selection of some by George Colman will serve to show the quality of this style of wit.

A gentleman having a remarkably long visage was one day riding by Mr. Whyte's school at Dublin, at the gate of which he overheard young Richard Brinsley Sheridan say: "That gentleman's face is longer than his life." Struck by the strangeness of the remark, he turned his horse's head, and requested its meaning. "Sir," said the boy, "I meant no offense in the world, but I have read in the Bible at school that a man's life is but a span, and I am sure your face is double that length." The gentleman threw the lad sixpence for his wit.

In preaching a charity sermon, Rev. Sydney Smith frequently repeated the assertion that, of all nations, Englishmen were most distinguished for generosity and the love of their species. The collection happened to be inferior to his expectations; and he said that he had evidently made a great mistake, for that his expression should have been that they were distinguished for the love of their specie.

W. H. Ireland, the Shakespeare forger, wrote in a volume of his "Rhapsodies":

"As on thy title-page poor fool a book,
Full off I cast a sad and pensive look,
I shave my head and pare these!
For I, alas! no brazen front possess,
Nor do I try potent art unless,
To send thee forth from censure free."

Upon this Porson wrote: "Though I can not help looking upon him as too modest in the fourth verse, he certainly underrates the amount and extent of his possessions; he is by no means poor in his own brass."

George Colman was an admirable punster. Sheridan once said, when George made a successful hit: "I hate a pun, but Colman almost reconciles me to the infliction." He was once asked if he knew Theodore Hook. "Oh, yes," was his reply, "Hook and I (eye) are old associates."

One day, when Colman and his son were walking from Soho Square to the Hay Market, two wittings, Miles Peter Andrews and William Augustus Miles, were coming the contrary way, on the opposite side of the street. They had each sent a dramatic manuscript for the Summer Theatre, and, being anxious to get the start of each other in the production of their several works, they both called out: "Remember, Colman, I am first man." "Humph," muttered the manager, as they passed on, "they may talk about first oars, but they have got a scull between them." This reminds one of a witticism of Douglas Jerrold. Two conceited young authors were boasting that they rowed off the same boat with a celebrated wit of the day. "Aye," replied Jerrold, "but not with the same sculls."—N. Y. Observer.

Parisian Sportsmen's Clubs.

The Paris Jockey Club was established in 1828 with a budget of about fifty thousand francs, whereas at present its annual expenditure amounts to over a million francs. The first President of the Club was an Englishman, residing in Paris—Lord Henry Seymour, noted no less for his sumptuous mode of living and costly equipages than for his extraordinary physical strength. He was able to raise one hundred pounds to his shoulder with his little finger. One day he stopped his carriage in the Rue de la Paix and got out to thrash two sailors who were maltreating an old apple-woman. He was very popular with the Paris populace in consequence of this and similar actions. The oldest club in Paris is the Cercle de l'Union, which was founded in 1828 as a center of opposition to Louis Philippe.—N. Y. Post.

Contagion by Mail.

The Watertown (N. Y.) Times gives the case of a little girl who was dying with scarlet-fever. She sent a "dying kiss" to a little friend, which was imprinted on a letter and a circle drawn around the kissed spot. The "little friend" kissed the spot when the letter was received and shortly afterward became a victim to the disease. It was the only case in the place, and her physician believes the affection was communicated through the mails.

—Barnum is on the search this year for curiosities of a rarer character than he has ever before exhibited. His agents are scouring the country to discover an editor who can find his blotting-paper when he wants it, and who does not stick his mucilage brush regularly into the ink bottle. The thirty-eight States have been explored thus far without success, but, still hopeful, the agents are preparing to swoop down on the Territories.—N. Y. Herald.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The report of the South African Postmaster General for the year 1884 shows that the weight of diamonds which passed through the postoffice during that year was 1,811 pounds, eight ounces.

—It is said that no man ever made an impromptu speech with which he was entirely satisfied. The best way to make an impromptu speech, and not feel bad about it afterward, is to get somebody to do it for you.—Chicago Ledger.

—Some idea of the immigration to Texas from the older Southern States since the war, says the Laredo Times, may be had from the notices of reunions of Alabama brigades, Georgia regiments, Virginia "Black Horse," etc., in various portions of Texas.

—"Lenses of rock crystal taken from the ruins of Nineveh," said a member at the meeting of the microscopists, in Cleveland, the other day, "suggests that microscopes may have been used in those days." No one knows, indeed, who did invent the magnifying glass.

—Some of the soil in Manitoba, analyzed, showed that the only element of fertility threatening to become deficient was lime. The proportion of nitrogen was greater than in the best English pasture soils, and potash and phosphoric acid were abundant. Magnesia was in large quantity, which is important in the raising of wheat.—Chicago Herald.

—Why is it that the traveler will get in a common Austrian or Bavarian gasthaus a better cup of "morning coffee" than he will find in the best hotels of New York or Boston? Is it that the "congregated plan" will not apply to coffee making—that is, you can not make coffee by the gallon for hundreds? Whatever be the reason this is the one great defect of the American hotel.—N. Y. Times.

—For some days past a band of gypsies have been encamped near Portland, and several of them have paid us brief visits. They say they have wandered all over the United States, the head of the family having come here some twelve years ago. A dark-browed leader of the band is a fortune teller. She says she met Queen Victoria in the Highlands of Scotland and told her fortune. She was asked if they regarded it as a high honor, and replied, "No, my people were great when her people were unknown, and then she only gave me a shilling.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

—A boy was flying his kite on the commons near Cedar Avenue, east of the Cleveland & Pittsburgh Railroad, Saturday morning. Some one was driving a herd of cows, and the cow in the lead got entangled in the kite string. Away she went and in the right direction to catch the wind. The kite soared aloft about fifteen feet above the cow, and the whole herd took after her. The boy did not want to lose his kite, and he with some men joined in pursuit. The scene was ludicrous in the extreme to observers.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

—It is a common mistake to regard the term negro as synonymous with Africa. The word negro does not denote a nation, but an ideal type constituted by the assemblage of certain physical characteristics exemplified in the natives of certain portions of Africa and their descendants in America and the West Indies. As a rule the prevalent color in Africa is that of the Arab, the Indian and the Australian. The true negro districts are the Senegal, the Gambia, the Niger and the intermediate rivers of the coast, parts of Sudania, Sennaar, Kardofan and Darfur.—Philadelphia Press.

—The area of Chatham, on Cape Cod, which is quite popular as a summer resort, grows smaller every year, the onslaught of the ocean, when storms prevail, breaking away the bluff and washing the sandy cliff into the ocean. Where the main street of the village was twenty years ago, the surf of the Atlantic rolls. Several cottages of fishermen and villagers, situated near the bluff, have been undermined in years past, and several buildings have recently been abandoned as unsafe. The original fishing hamlet is rapidly going out to sea, and the old village will be entirely obliterated before long.—Boston Budget.

ICEBERGS.

Suggestions Looking to Protection Against Them.

Never were there so many icebergs in the Atlantic as during last May and June. These were found as far south as 39 degrees, and were in the line of the steamships that ply between Europe and America. Navigation, therefore, has been extra perilous, for the vapor of icebergs is foggy, and in the night there is no means of gauging how near they are to a ship. The City of Berlin, with 1,400 passengers, struck an iceberg in the night, but she was saved from destruction by her long bowsprit and prow, an unusual appendage to a newly built steam-vessel. Inventors have recently been at work to find means of protecting steamships from these collisions. Prof. Bell suggests that an echo might tell of the proximity of an iceberg, and commended the plan proposed by Mr. F. Della Torre, of Baltimore, for effecting this object. This was tested on Chespeake Bay. The apparatus consisted of a speaking-trumpet attached to the muzzle of a musket, from which blank cartridges were fired at passing vessels. The experiment so far succeeded that at a mile off river steamboats and passing schooners returned echoes at intervals proportionate to their distance. Another apparatus employs a bell for producing the sound, and a large open vessel received the echo. The sound in this case was conveyed to the officer of the deck by telephone. These and other inventions are being tested, and, if successful, they will greatly reduce the danger of iceberg collisions. Intense fogs and a lower temperature are now the only means of suggesting that a large icefield is near. Steamships now plow through the ocean at so rapid a pace that a collision with an iceberg would be certain destruction. There are other ocean perils, such as abandoned vessels of which there are thousands afloat on the ocean, a collision with any one of which might sink a noble ship freighted with human lives.—Demorest's Monthly.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—Emperor William, of Germany, always has a chapter of the Bible read to him immediately after dinner.

—The compulsory education law is a failure in New York, according to Commissioner Peck, of the State Labor Bureau.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Edinburgh is probably the most thoroughly Presbyterian city in the world. Out of a total of 181 churches 124 are Presbyterian.

—No fewer than 157 professors at German universities are between the ages of seventy and ninety, of whom the greater part still lecture. Banke, at ninety, is the oldest.

—A clergyman has been making calculations, and announces as the startling result that all the salaries of religious teachers in the country do not amount to so much as the sum spent annually in supporting dogs.—Christian at Work.

—New York has 64 Catholic churches, Chicago 55, Brooklyn 46, Philadelphia 45, St. Louis 43, Boston 38, Cincinnati 36, New Orleans 29, Baltimore 28, Cleveland 25, San Francisco and Louisville 21 each, Detroit 18, Buffalo and Albany 13 each.

—The masters of the great English public schools complain of the imperfect religious training which boys bring with them from home. Even those who come from conspicuously religious families are found ignorant of the commonest facts in Scripture.

—Two women have been elected to the vestry of an Episcopal church in Delaware, and Bishop Stevens has decided that they are eligible under the law. This is the first instance in which women have been elected to such a position either in this country or in England.—Zion's Advocate.

—The Christian Advocate, being asked by a correspondent: "What is the object intended by the Apostle James in ordering that the sick, when the elders of the church go to pray with them, shall be anointed with oil in the name of the Lord?" replies that "the passage plainly means 'Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, using the best medical skill in the name of the Lord.'"

—The commencement exercises at the various colleges of the country show that the disposition on the part of alumni to rally about their respective "benign mothers" on these occasions, increases with each year, and the colleges are not backward in doing those of their children who have done well in the world due honor. The consideration shown a successful man by the faculty and students of his old college is one of the sweetest things he ever finds in life.—Chicago Current.

—A uniform has been assigned to the students of the Russian universities, the wearing of which will be obligatory. It will consist of a cap, single-breasted frock-coat and dark green trousers. The cap, collar and cuffs of the coat are to be of dark blue, the cuffs to have a broad band of gold lace. It is supposed that, as the bulk of Russian university students come from poor classes, the object of prescribing a uniform and adding to their expenses must be to throw a fresh difficulty in the way of very poor people taking to an academical career.

PUNGENT PARAGRAPHS.

—Love and burglars have something in common. The both laugh at locksmiths, and they both have a good deal of Cupidity about them.

—Some one wants to know what is more disagreeable than a woman with a crying baby. The answer to this is "the baby."—Hartford Sunday Journal.

—Scientists say that all the water on the earth will dry up in 10,000,000 years. Most of our milkmen will be able to accumulate a fortune during the interval.—Philadelphia Call.

—"The best way of sobering up is to bathe the head and wrists in cold water and take a potion of bromide of potassium and aromatic ammonia or valerian." Only one better; don't get drunk.—Buffalo Express.

—Mrs. Montague—Do you sing, Mr. De Lyle? Mr. De Lyle (with a superior smile)—I belong to the college glee club. Mrs. Montague (disappointed)—O, I'm so sorry. I hoped that you sung.—N. Y. Times.

—"I pay my hired man sixteen dollars a month and found," said old Blodget. "And found," interrupted his niece. "What do you mean by that? How do you find him?" "Why," replied the old man, "if he doesn't know I'm comin' I generally find him either asleep or with his arms around the hired girl."—The Judge.

—"Is your pa at home, little girl?" "Yes sir; do you wish to see him?" "Yes." "But you won't know him if you do see him?" "Why, what's the matter?" "Well, you see, out in the country, on our farm, a man and his wife got to fighting, and pa he tried to stop them." "O, indeed!" "Yes, you'd better call again. You wouldn't know pa now.—Chicago Journal.

—"Why did you sell your oxen?" said Dobyn to a colored farmer. "Well, boss, I took er notion dat I wanted to jine de church." "What difference did that make?" "What difference dat make! Boss, did yer eber dribe steers?" "I never did." "Den yer can't un'erstan' de situation; but I'll tell yer, boss, steers hab mighty little 'spect for religion. Dey don't know nothin' but cuss words."—Boston Post.

—A running moral.—

A man may go spinning along,
Like a bicyclist singing a song,
And though he looks stately and tall—
May be just on the edge of a fall.
And this moral the cycle conveys,
Be modest and sweet in your ways,
Because if you happen to get a sad pitch
You'll find friends to help you right out of the ditch.

—Boston Budget.

—An editor lay in an unconscious condition, and for some time it was feared that he was dead. "Can't you rouse him, doctor?" was anxiously asked. "No," the physician replied. "I fear that life is extinct." Then the editor's assistant bent over and whispered in his ear: "A gentleman wants to put an advertisement in the paper." Immediately the unconscious man's face showed signs of returning life, and struggling to a sitting posture, he said feebly: "How many lines?"—N. Y. Journal.

The Voice of the People.

The people, as a whole, seldom make mistakes, and the unanimous voice of praise which comes from those who have used Hood's Sarsaparilla, fully justifies the claims of the proprietors of this great medicine. Indeed, these very claims are based entirely on what the people say Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for them. Read the abundant evidence of its curative powers, and give it a fair, honest trial.

The colored women of Mobile have organized an art association.

An old and intimate friend of mine is Parker's Hair Balsam. I have used it five years, and could not do without it. It has stopped my hair from falling, restored its natural black color and wholly cleansed it from dandruff. Miss Pearl Aneson, St. Louis, Mo.

The story is told of an old hunter in Michigan who lost his way in the woods a number of times while the country was new. At length he secured a pocket compass and its use was explained to him by a friend. But shortly afterward he lost his way again and lay out as usual. When found he was asked why he did not travel by the compass. He did not dare "he said. He wanted to go north, and he "tried to make the thing point north, but it wasn't no use, 'twould shake, shake, shake round and point southeast every time.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburgh, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by C. A. Wright & Co.

Many a man who had lost nerve, vigor and energy, has been cured by Hunt's Remedy.

"Right Peart."

"I was right peart till the rheumatiz sot in," said a suffering old man who lived near the swamp. Fact is, wherever you live you can't be right peart if you are a victim of this troublesome disease. Captain C. W. Hostenpiller, Springfield, O., says, "I found great relief from inflammatory rheumatism by using Brown's Iron Bitters." Thousands of other people have found similar relief.

They have no fire insurance companies in Japan. When there is a fire the owner is executed.

In fifteen minutes after one application I was wonderfully helped. Two weeks ago I commenced using it and now I feel entirely cured. It is the greatest discovery ever known—Duhamel Clark, Farmer Lee, Mass. Price fifty cents.

Women are everywhere using and recommending Parker's Tonic because they have learned from experience that it speedily overcomes despondency, indigestion, pain or weakness in the back or kidneys, and other troubles peculiar to the sex.

A Fortunate Discovery.

A new light is thrown on the subject of Consumption by Dr. Kemp, discoverer of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and lungs. A remedy that has proved itself to be a remarkable compound. It does its work thoroughly, stopping a hacking cough instantly. Sold by Baker & Hall. Price 50 cents and $1. Trial size free. Get one.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (ship-smithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strength to the whole system as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it, do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 526 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

CATAARH—A NEW TREATMENT.

From the Montreal Star.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for catarrh. Out of 200 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination. This accomplished he claims the Catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

The pound social to be held at the Christian church has been postponed one week. It will be held Wednesday, Oct. 14. All are cordially invited.

Heavy roads and rainy weather compelled Geo. Manning's pavillion show to stop over a day to rest.

Geo. and Chas. Gripton have started their sorghum mill and are kept busy. They report the cane better than usual. They employ several hands and are making a fine grade of syrup. Those having cane will do well to patronize them.

Score one for Edgar Pilbeam; a boy, ten pounds.

Our new self-appointed deputy sheriff, having temporarily left his profession for the purpose of giving lessons to his brother M. D., may have an opportunity of leaving one himself. Stick to your own trade.

Wm. Nivison is the champion corn cutter, three acres a day is no task for him.

John Zeluff is nearly ready to occupy his new house.

Chas. DuBois is busy building. He has a fine house under way.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Hallock, made a short visit to their son, our doctor, this week.

Business here is looking up. Quite a few car loads of wheat, hay and oats have been bought and shipped from here.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Ours is a case of great expectations and no happenings except a storm that has peaked off cold enough to freeze ones good intentions, and the formal taking possession of post-office dignity, by Delamater and Covert; they fall into line as gracefully as Mr. Woodward breaks rank, and there is an occasional murmur heard about losing the best post-master we ever had and turning out republicans to make room for democrats. Whether the same kind of reform has been fashionable with the previous administration is not told, but it seems certain that a majority of offices have been occupied by republicans while democrats learned to take care of themselves, or else we should not hear so much outcry about being turned out. From this we learn that the winning party is the civil service reform party, and the most natural result of attaining power is to fortify it by adherents, though its a busy day when some one does not find time to tell me that all this trouble would not be but for those traitor Prohibitionists. Now, its real mean to talk that way, when I am not a natural eyed citizen, and am just glorious because that insignificant clique has not proved traitorous to professed principles. Its probably a defect of constitution, but I never can see how always playing second fiddle is going to fit people to lead the orchestra.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The late rains make wheat look fine.

Snow could be seen very distinctly Monday morning by those that were up early enough.

The society will have a grab bag for an amusement at their next meeting, held at the home of Mrs. W. P. Cadmus next week Friday evening. Each person is respectfully invited to bring some article to put in the bag. The proceeds to be used in purchasing windows for the church that were broken at the time of the cyclone. Mrs. Cadmus desires a large attendance, and all who go can depend on a grand time if they try.

Mrs. Conklin has had her store raised and a cellar dug underneath; she keeps a good assortment of groceries and sells as cheap as any. We are glad to say that her store is closed on Sundays

Rev. E. B. Sutton, of Adrian, was advertised to give a temperance lecture at the Methodist church Tuesday evening, but for some unknown reason failed to put in an appearance.

Norris Morey left recently for Bay City to visit relatives there and perhaps stay.

Wilson Lee's shoe maker left last week, not for want of work, for he had all he could do, disappointing 4 or 5 who left their measures, but for want of company. He was a good workman. Lee wants a good shoe maker.

Ed. Courth moved into Mr. Cooper's stone house last week.

POLITICS BADLY MIXED.

It will probably be admitted by everybody that political matters in this country are well mixed at present. In Iowa the Republican party is openly advocating prohibition. In Ohio it is abusing every man who does favor that proposition. In New York the Democrats, who pretend to indorse Mr. Cleveland's administration, are attacked by the Independents because they did not indorse it heartily enough; the Republicans, who condemned it most extravagantly, are receiving Independent encouragement, and Democrats who wish to strengthen the Administration are advised by the Independent press to support the Republican ticket. In Virginia the Democrats and Republicans are both led by Confederate Brigadiers, and the negroes are holding a state convention to decide which party their race should support. In Mississippi the Republicans, led by Chalmers, the man who massacred the negro garrison of Fort Pillow, resolve not to put a ticket in the field, and Chalmers devotes his time to an effort to elect Foraker Governor of Ohio, on the ground that Hoadly, who was an ardent Republican during the ware is disloyal. In Pennsylvania the Democrats are for a protective tariff, as are the Republicans also, while both parties denounce silver in New York, and both declare in favor of it in Iowa.

Out of all this ridiculous jumble of ideas and most grotesque form of advocacy only one thing appears to be reasonably plain, and that is that party names stand for very little. The citizen who permits himself to be carried away by his idolatry of party under such circumstances lacks judgment and balance.—Chicago Herald.

GEN. SHERIDAN ON FAME.

Recently while starting on his way to Grand Rapids, Congressman Eldredge met Gen. Phil. Sheridan, who had gone into the smoking car. The two seated themselves together after mutual recognition, and the conversation finally turned on the subject of fame. Between puffs the stubby little general related the following personal incident, which we write as it was related to us. Said the general: "I was in Iowa last summer, and wishing for a little recreation, I left my stopping place and started for the woods armed with a gun, for a sportsman's exercise. In the course of my rambles I came across an old farmer, who, after a little conversation, inquired my name. I gave it and he repeated after me, 'Sheridan, Sheridan—are you any relation to Gen. Sheridan? I am Gen. Sheridan, I answered. The old man backed off a little, sized me up all the way and a look of utter incredulity spread over his countenance as he replied, 'Not by a — sight! Gen. Sheridan is an almighty sight bigger man than you are, or how could he be heard all over a battle field? You can't play that yarn on me." "He wouldn't believe at all," said the general, "and he left me thoroughly convinced that I had tried to impose upon him; "and Gen. Sheridan laughed heartily as he knocked the ashes off his cigar.—Adrian Record.

R. & I. and the Michigan Central railroads and the Chicago and Detroit steamboat lines that touch at the island will lend a helping hand to the project. It is proposed to have it ready for occupancy next season.

Indications at the university of Michigan point to an attendance of 1,500 this year. In the literary department a general change of professors and instructors has been made. Prof. Hudson takes nearly all of Dr. Adams's old work and Judge Cooley takes the courses in constitutional history and in American history. In English Prof. Demmon takes the purely literary courses, Prof. Burt the rhetorical and philosophical, and Mr. Burnett the philological including Anglo Saxon and German. Mr. Ayers has a number of new courses in biology.

AN OLD MAN'S MEMORIES.

On the Way From the Old House to the New.

I'll sit a moment by the road. I will not keep you long;
But, dearie, I am very tired. Somehow, the journeys throng
About me so, thickly packs dark, for all 'tis bright and July.
It breaks my heart, this leaving, dear, the old house for the new.

It's different, child, when folks are young;
they wake and work and sleep
And take life's chances as they come; old roots have struck too deep
To bear transplanting with you know. I'm just like that, you see.
Don't look for any second growth from such a blighted tree.

For nigh on fifty years, my dear, I've crossed that threshold o'er
And hung my hat upon the peg that's just behind the door.
Your mother's stand and rocking-chair were in exact place each night;
And when she smiled to welcome me her look was like the light.

You were our youngest, little Jean, the lambkin of the fold;
I know in your sweet eyes, my love, we both were always cold;
But when I brought my bonny bride to share that little home
Her like was not in far or near, wherever you might roam.

With hair like waves of crinkled gold, and cheeks like roses red,
A step so swift, a laugh so gay, she had when we were wed;
Oh, up and down the country-side her match was not that day.
I never thought I could be glad that she had gone away.

But now I'm thankful mother's safe where trial's never come,
Where happy souls no more go out, once gathered in that home;
I would not have her here to feel the loneliness and pain
Which will be mine the rest of life, in sunshine and in rain.

Forgive me, dear. My selfish grief is clouding you, I know.
But bear with me, my little one, and now I'll rise and go;
I'll try to be, for your sweet sake, as cheerful
as I can,
And meet this trial as I would were I a younger man.

It would have lasted out my time, they might have let me stay
And die in peace where I have lived in peace
my life's long day.
But, Jeanie, guide me on, my dear—you say
the sky is blue?
It's dark to me, now that I leave the old house for the new.

A FATHER'S LETTER.

Advice Given by Hon. Edwards Pierrepont to His Son.

The New York Mail and Express recently published the following letter furnished that paper by a gentleman who had been intrusted with a copy of the same, and who says, in speaking of the young Mr. Pierrepont, who had just died at Rome, while Secretary of the American Legation in that city: "Mr. Pierrepont was a young man of rare gifts and accomplishments and of great promise. He was a brilliant scholar, a close student, a thoroughly upright Christian gentleman, and a manly fellow. * * * For a score of years I have enjoyed the warm personal and much-valued friendship of the father, Mr. Edwards Pierrepont, Mr. Lowell's predecessor as United States Minister to England, and know of his solicitude, hopes and plans for his son.

"On the 8th of March, 1879, Mr. Pierrepont wrote a private letter to his son for his future guidance and help, intrusting me with a copy at that time. This letter so impressed me by the wisdom and discretion that I now offer it, upon my own responsibility, for publication. I do this in the conviction that many a young man who reads it will be inspired and strengthened by its teachings and guided by its counsels."

THE LETTER.

NO. 193 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK,
March 8, 1879.

MY DEAR SON—I would gladly save you from much annoyance and from many sorrows, by giving you the benefit of my own experience. I have been through the preparatory schools and the university, and I know all their trials and their temptations. I also know how prone boys are to think that the times have changed since their fathers were young, and that the true rules for the conduct of life have ceased to be the same. My son, as you grow, older, you will find that from the time of Solomon to this hour human nature has not changed at all, and that the guide to a prosperous and a happy life is precisely the same as it was when that wise man wrote. The boy who is fortunate enough to have a father whose experience is large and varied, and who communicates it with no possible motive but the best good of his child, has great advantage, if he will heed what is told him, but will suffer more deeply in the end if he comes to see that the care, and the earnest warning, and the faithful counsel have been disregarded.

Banish forever from your mind that folly which young men so very stupidly cherish, that "the world and the ways of the world are essentially different now from what they were forty years ago," and settle forever in your mind certain principles which you are never to doubt, and never to swerve from in your course of life.

First—That there is a great first cause which rules the world; a something which we can but dimly comprehend, because it is too vast for our finite minds. It is the infinite. It is God. It is fruitless to try "to find out God." He is "our Father in Heaven;" this is all that the simple child can know; it is all that the most learned man can ever know. That this Great Creator is just and merciful, and rules by equal laws, we have every reason to believe and that it is one of the Creator's laws that our lives may be influenced by earnest prayer for guidance in the right way, there is no doubt.

I do not mean that to pray for specific things, such as riches and honors, will bring riches and honors as matter of course, but that honest and earnest prayer to our Father in Heaven for guidance in the way that is for our best good is sure to bring strength and enlightment to the mind, and, thus to aid us in the affairs of life.

Every day ask your Heavenly Father to guide you in all things in the way which is right, and you will not go wrong.

Most of the scientific men of our time devote themselves to the study of the laws of matter, and they seem to forget that man, even while on earth, has a spiritual as well as a material nature. They find nothing but matter in the brain which they dissect, and they jump at the conclusion that there is nothing but matter. Their discoveries in the laws of matter are wonderful and invaluable, but they utterly neglect the study of the spiritual laws, which are as real and as certainly a part of man as the grosser substance. That the soul survives the body, and that it is happy or miserable, "according to the deeds done in the body," never allow yourself to doubt. If skeptics wish to talk to you about it, don't argue; arguments on these subjects never do any good; you might as well argue that you loved your mother. Practice what I suggest, and you will know from consistent experience that what I tell you is true, and you will be made much happier and serener day by day, and far more prosperous in this world. When in the family of boy, Henry Seymour, at Holme Pierrepont, you saw how cheerful and serenely happy they all were under the influence of a religious life.

Second—That truth, unfaltering integrity, justice and honor are never to be departed from under any circumstances.

Lies come from meanness, low vanity, cowardice, and of a depraved nature, and they always fall of their object and bring the charge into contempt. Without strict integrity, justice and honor, you can never have any great success in anything of lasting respect from anybody. Every one is found out sooner or later, and lying sooner than he supposes. Indeed, your true character is sure to be known, and sure to be justly appreciated.

I pray you, my son, never trouble yourself about popularity. Do right, the best you can, deserve respect, and you will be certain to have it.

If you see a fellow-student who is always manly, honorable, brave and just, and who devotes himself to the duties before him every day, who resists temptations to pleasures which interfere with his health, and hence with his success, you cannot help admiring and respecting him; and so is it with the most jaded idler at Christ Church. Oxford has never graduated a man who was an indolent failure at the college who ever became an eminent success afterward, and she never will.

Attend to the duties and obey the laws of the university. It sometimes enters the shallow heads of young men that it is clever and spirited to transgress the rules. It is supremely silly. It requires neither brains nor courage to break the laws, and scores of a desire to get cheap notoriety through cowardice or vice, and the aspiring idiot always fails in the end. Thieves and burglars break laws; true men keep them; they are made for good.

The great secret of making the labors of university life or other life easy is to do each duty every day. If you let a burden of arrears accumulate it will discourage you. If you have five things to do each day, they are easily done; but if you put them off with the idea that you can do fifty on the tenth day you will surely fail.

Mind not what others do; they may be able to waste more time than you can afford; more likely, however, they will fail. Many in Christ Church do not expect to make any figures in the world, and have no ambition but to pass through; and many affect to despise the diligent.

If you have not a determined purpose to take a stand as a scholar, and to lead an earnest, manly life after you leave Oxford, then leave it now, and save me the mortification and expense, and yourself the reproach and sorrow which your countrymen bestow upon wasted opportunities. Do well, and there is nothing in my power which I would not do to advance you. Be a failure, through your own indolence weakness and indulgence, and though you are my only son, I should feel that I had one too many.

Success comes not of spasmodic effort but on continued every-day work.

Read the fable of the hare and the tortoise and profit by its teachings, and remember that success, with honor, is one of the highest pleasures of life. I have many fears lest in companionship with so many young men of easy fortune, and no ambition beyond that of the easy life of an English gentleman, you lose the sturdy purpose which should animate you daily. Remember that America is not England. No one is born to titled greatness or to any other greatness here; he who gets it must achieve it, and he who can not achieve it in some form is of small consideration. We have no idle class, and I trust that we may never have. An idle life is a worthless and unhappy life.

Never go to balls or parties in term time, and avoid late wines and suppers at all times; they always injure the health, and without health life has scarce a pleasure.

From his birth, Samson drank neither wine nor strong drink, and those who are trained for the ring imitate his example. During our late war it was conclusively proved that those who drank water only escaped disease and endured fatigue far beyond the others.

If you drink wine at all, be very moderate; there is madness habit; a single glass is just as satisfactory as a dozen, if you so train yourself.

I can not too strongly urge upon you the importance of early retiring to rest. Investigations into the causes of longevity have shown that early sleep and early rising are among the chiefest reasons of long life, and science has revealed the fact that the magnetic rays of the sun are widely different in the morning from those of the declining day. As the sun goes down, most of the beasts and birds seek their places of rest; many of the flowers and plants and trees fold their leaves; and the sunflower, which looks toward the sinking sun in the West, is turned to greet him in the morning toward the East. As he approaches to usher in the day, all nature, from bird to flower, seems animated with invigorated life. Then the mind of man who has had refreshing sleep awakes with its best thoughts, its wisest plans, its largest capabilities. But this can come only to him who has spent the midnight hours in sleep. Sleep restores the nervous forces of the exhausted brain, and the best constitution will soon be shattered and the best mind will become unstrung if sleep is neglected. It was justly called:

Sore labor's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher at life's feast.

The memory of mischief is no desirable fame.

Third—That economy is a virtue and that extravagance is a vice, never forget.

You never see a man of forty who regretted his economy; you will see plenty who mourn their early extravagance. Lavish expenditure never wins respect. It may win temporary flatterers, who despise the fool they flatter. Pay every debt you owe, but—

Neither a borrower nor a lender be,
For loan oft loses both itself and friend.

Let not your vanity ever tempt you to spend money. English young men are awake; they laugh at the foolish Americans who are so lavish. Remember that your hope, your pride, your life is to be in America. A country whose future is unimagined and whose greatness and power will surpass any empire in the world. You are to be part of it; and if you do not one day go as an ambassador from the greatest Republic that has ever been to the most powerful and advanced kingdom in Europe you will fail in your possibilities and of my hopes.

Don't listen to the twaddle about the decadence of England, she is not in decay, but in the full vigor of robust manhood. Great nations do not commence their fall until their morals are corrupted. As yet, England has a sturdy moral sense, courage and capacity for self-denial and for brave deeds; she believes in God and truth and justice. She has many faults and weaknesses. She is not moving forward with the colossal power of this younger, bolder, more rash and fearless America; her civilization is in advance of ours, but she has inherited many prejudices coming down from old centuries which retard her progress and from which we are free.

I would deprive you of no innocent pleasures; that is not pleasure which injures the health, jades the mind, and makes you feel meanly and weak and unequal to the labor which is to fit you for manly life.

Study well whatever the college course requires, and never say that this or that will be of no use. All is of use which disciplines and strengthens the mind. When training for a boxer you strike the sand bag; you would not tell the trainer that you do not expect to fight sand bags is your life, and hence you will not strike them now. You don't weights to strengthen your hands; you do dry work to strengthen the head; and remember that you must do it, no one else can do it for you; as well might you get some one else to strike the sand bag or lift the weight which was to strengthen your muscle.

Duties well done every day, and difficulties surmounted as they arise, are easier continually, and finally become lasting enjoyments.

Never play cards for money. It is no pleasure to win a fellow-students' money, and it is pain to lose your own. The habit is always bad, and often ruinous; never acquire it.

Dress like a gentleman; neither be peculiar or dashy, but dress as becomes you, not as becomes some one else. Never talk about your expenses or your money, and never be ashamed to have your money; on the contrary, be proud of it. Your business now is to acquire knowledge and good deed to make you display yours, especially to older men; but always try to learn of them.

Never say to another what it would be unpleasant to have him say to you.

Remember that good manners are of great importance. Manners should be frank and easy, with dignity.

Avoid fawning, toadying ways as you would the foul fiend. Never fawn to a prince or swagger to a peasant. Be courteous and manly everywhere and to everybody.

Let your manner be quiet; nothing is more underbred than a flurried address, with a face wrinkled all over with grinning delight.

The courteous can express pleasure and welcome with little contortions, and when those appear, whether in the son of a duke or a drayman, they are intensely vulgar.

You cannot have good manners in the drawing-room if your habitual manners are bad; the habit will betray you; let the habit be always good.

Far better that you look frightened, than that you degrade your countenance with silly hilarity.

Be a gentleman, feel like a gentleman, and you will look and act like one.

Sometimes you will be neglected, and your vanity may feel wounded. Never let this annoy you; be absolutely sure that in due time all will come right, and that you will have all the consideration which you merit. No one can do you any permanent injury but yourself. The world is so constituted that it is not in men's power to withhold respect from lofty character, real ability and good conduct.

You may be invited to a ball or a dinner because you dance or tell a good story; but no one since the time of Queen Elizabeth has been made a Cabinet Minister or a Lord Chancellor for such reasons.

The years of youth are short, and the pleasures of youth perish in manly life. Reputation, power and the consideration which comes of ability, attainments and good character are what the man from thirty to seventy covets. Nothing but the well-spent years of early life can secure these.

I would keep you from no enjoyments suited to your age which are not injurious to your real happiness and future success.

You have health and a good constitution, and you have no inherited tendencies to any vice. It is easy for you to do right, and it will be unpardonable if you go astray.

I rejoice to find that profanity is considered vulgar in England. During the two years that I resided in England I never heard a profane word from a gentleman. Among the young men, slang seemed to be abundant. I hope that it does not prevail at the University.

Remember that when you are twenty-five you will desire what others value at that age, and so at every stage of life. I mean what the higher order of men value.

Live each year in the way which will best fit you for the next year, and thus you will lead a happy life; a life which will secure to you the happier life to come.

You start with every advantage, but forget not that yours are advantages suited to America, not suited to England. No one has superior rank or higher social position than you in America. In England their ancient system of primogeniture and title gives precedence and outward respect, in a large degree, irrespective of merit. It is not so with us, and I am very glad. Quarrel not at all with their system; they seem to like it. But never covet it, and never commit the silly snobbery of pretending to prefer it to the system of your own country.

The social life of England is very charming, and their plan of leaving all land to the eldest son has built up vast estates, adorned and dignified with castles and halls filled with art and luxury and refined taste; but all this is at the sacrifice of many human rights which we value.

Nothing like this is possible in America, and it will not always last in England.

The substratum of the English character is solid, honest, truthful, and, in the main, just. Our best traits are a heritage from that race; but I feel quite sure that, with all our faults, we are rapidly improving upon our English sires, and that we may become quite the superior people as a whole.

Feel always a manly pride that you are an American, and that your future is here.

There is not in all historic time, a grander record than that of the United States. Before the nation was a hundred years old civil war broke out, and the North alone had at one time more than a million of armed men in the field, and the South had vast armies also. After four years of terrible war, more than 1,200,000 soldiers were disbanded almost in a day. They returned to the peaceful industries of civil life without a murmur, without disorder and without crime. Under our system of government they had learned to govern themselves. Even in the madness of the conflict, when the President was assassinated, the Government moved on without even a ripple of disturbance. More than three thousand million of debt was created, and the paper money was in such discredit that one gold dollar would buy two dollars and seventy cents of the paper. But so soon as the war ended we went bravely to work, paid off one-third of our vast debt, and now a paper dollar will buy a gold dollar in any part of the country, and our national credit is of the highest grade. We have finished more than seventy-five thousand miles of railway, revived our industries, increased in population, and our prosperity is such that our annual income is greater than that of any nation on the earth.

I have a letter from the Dean to-day, in which he says: "Your son's improvement has really astonished me." Continue to astonish the Dean and delight me.

This shows that you have the ability, and that there will be no excuse and no pardon if you are not faithful in the future. From time to time I shall hear from the Dean, and also from your tutor, and they will tell me all and only the truth. They will reveal your shortcomings, if you have them, as well as your merits. You accept too many invitations from your fellow students. This will weaken your energies and prevent your success; besides, you will become a bore, which avoid as you would "the plague." Short visits do not bore.

When we last met, you did not carry yourself erect. You seemed to think that you were awkwardly tall, and you tried to look shorter; this is a mistake; you are nineteen years old and scarce more than six feet high; that is not too tall; but if you grow to any height, carry yourself erect.

When you have done the duties of the day, and done them well, take your pleasures, which will be all the more keen; and when you have well finished the labors of the term, you will enjoy the vacation a thousand times the more by reason of your successful toil.

I do not need, in this letter, to repeat the warnings against those petty vices, temptations and follies of which I have so often spoken.

I will print this because I wish you to read it more than once.

God bless and keep and guide my boy.

Your ever devoted FATHER.

COCK-FIGHTING.

How the Chicken Disputes of Our Forefathers Were Conducted.

With all the antiquarian knowledge of the present day, we doubt whether one man in a thousand could give a tolerably accurate description of the cock-fights of his forefathers. How cock-fighting is conducted at present we do not pretend to know; but ancient chronicling hath its literature, and, besides, the written word, there is considerable tradition concerning it, which some of us are old enough to have received from the very mouths of our parents.

The first and most important point in cock-fighting was the weight of the birds. In most agreements for a cock-fight—"articles for a cock-match"—was the technical phrase—it was stipulated that no cock should weigh less than three pounds six ounces, or more than four pounds eight ounces. When the cocks of each side had been weighed, the next thing was to pair them. This was done by matching all the cocks on either side whose weights came within one ounce of each other. The lightest pair of cocks were always made to fight first, and then those gradually heavier, until the heaviest pair fought last. This venerable rule had been in use since the days of King Charles II. Although the combs of the birds were always cut, they had to appear "with a fair hackle, not too near shorn, or out, nor with any other fraud." The spurs were usually of silver, at least in the great matches. At the time appointed for the cock fight to begin, the "masters of the match" took their seats opposite to each other, on either side of the cock-pit, accompanied by two officials termed the "setters-to." To these two "feeders" appeared, each carrying a cock. After due examination, the birds were made over to the setters to, and they handed them to the masters of the match, who started the fun by putting the cocks upon the mat on the floor of the cock-pit. The next part of the business the cocks managed for themselves. The "noble sport" now began in earnest, and sometimes two good birds would fight until one cock had killed the other or thrashed him to helplessness. But not uncommonly, after a sharp round, both cocks would suspend hostilities to gain breath, and, withdrawing to a little distance, each would watch the other in the hope of catching him in a careless or listless moment. For a short time this rather added to the excitement of the spectators, but human patience soon became exhausted when two cocks stood solemnly eyeing each other. Now the limit of time for cocks to ogle without fighting was fixed at the interval during which an official, called "the teller of the law," could count forty. When this limit was passed, human science was brought to the assistance of the birds. The setters-to then caught them, and carrying them to the middle of the pit, "delivered them on their legs, beak to beak." If either of them had been blinded in the previous battle, their heads were to be made to touch each other. If one cock refused to fight, he was tried ten times, and he had to refuse to fight as many times before he was considered beaten. It sometimes happened that the cock who would fight died from his wounds before his adversary had refused ten times, and in that case the craven bird was considered to have won the battle. The law further provided rules in case both cocks refused to fight, as well as in other cases which it is hardly necessary that we should enumerate; but they were nearly all based on the principle that "the teller of the law" should count forty, twenty or ten, according to circumstances, between the intervals of the fights. It will be readily understood, from this description, that a great part of a cock-fight was occupied by the setters-to squatting opposite to each other in the middle of the pit and "delivering the cocks on their legs, beak to beak."

Cock-fighting was fashionable in Greece at least five hundred years B. C., and it was probably a very ancient sport in China, where it is still highly popular. In India, again, cock-fighting is an institution of very great antiquity. Mr. Doyle, in his book on poultry, assumes that the Britons practiced cock fighting before the landing of Cæsar, from the statement of that author to the effect that the Britons only reared their fowls for amusement. Both Henry VIII. and James I. were fond of "cocking." Oliver Cromwell legislated against it, but Charles II. revived it. The Royal Cockpit at Westminster, which was the head quarters of cock fighting, was established by Henry VIII., and even in the present century mains have been fought in it. Newmarket has been the scene of numberless cock-fights. Indeed, it may be said that for a long time cock-fighting went hand-in-hand with racing, and it used to be reported in the official racing calendar, which was then called the Sporting Calendar. Taking up the Sporting Calendar of 1775, we read that at Newcastle upon-Tyne, during the race meeting the gentlemen of Durham and Northumberland fought a "main of cocks," consisting of thirty-eight battles, and ending in "a drawn main." It is said that 1,000 game cocks have been killed in fights during one week at Newcastle. The gentlemen of the same counties fought another main, at the Durham races of the same year, when Northumberland won, after thirty-four battles had been fought. Although the matches were sometimes made between individuals, it was more usual for the mains at races to be fought between cocks belonging to the gentlemen of two adjoining counties. Ten guineas each battle and one or two hundred on "the odd," seem to have been the usual stakes; but there was an immense amount of betting, and the odds were calculated to a great nicety. Hoyle gives a table of odds which is quite appalling. For instance, he quotes one case in which the betting is 1 3,843,421-7,821,875 to 1 against a certain contingency. Mr. Doyle mentions a cock-fight in India for "a lac of rupees (£10,000)," but it is probable that more money has been lost and won over cock-fighting in England than in any other country.—London Saturday Review.

ERRORS OF SPEECH.

The Crudities Which Punctuate the Articles Appearing in the Public Press.

It is remarkable how many glaring errors made by new-paper writers find their way into print despite the care of a trained and critical editor. The other day a brief account of the life of a distinguished man contained the words, "later on" three times. To have made the mistake of using "on" once in connection with "later" would have been bad enough, but the tripli-ation of the error deserved the editor's rebuke with a warning-note that starvation stared the writer in the face. In the same article appeared "the above remark" as if above were an adjective instead of a preposition. It is true that Webster, in a note, says "Above is often used elliptically as an adjective by omitting the word mentioned or quoted," but "foregoing" or "aforementioned" are more correct words for the purpose. It is an every-day occurrence to read "suspicioned" for "suspected," the noun for the verb, "reckon" for "suppose or conjecture," where no calculation is intended, and "raise" for "rear or bring up" when reference is made to children who are "reared," and not to corn or hogs, which are "raised." "Expect" is often misapplied for "suspect." We "expect" what is future and likely to be realized, and "suspect" what is not manifest and dependent on mere contingencies.

Redundancy is another serious fault with new-paper writers, and even editors who know better and have more time to prepare their articles than reporters. "Return again," "predict beforehand," "from hence," "a sight to behold," "try an experiment," "substitute in the place of," "filled full," "fixed fact," "report again," "free gratis," "new beginner," "have got," "throughout the whole of" and "must necessarily" are phrases to be found on every page. To illustrate the errors—to experiment is to "try the experiment," a "fact" is always "fixed," "free" and "gratis" mean the same, "have" carries with it the idea of possession without "got" and "whence" and "hence" imply from.

The nice discrimination of synonyms requires a little time for thought, which reporters do not always have, but even in this feature there are palpable errors which ought to be avoided. For instance, it is incorrect to say "Let me learn you how to do it." "Teach" should be substituted for "learn," as to teach means to impart, and to learn means to receive instruction. Food is not "healthy," but "wholesome," and good soil not in cultivation, not "fruitful," but "fertile," which means having the power of producing in abundance. To say to a lady: "I shall take the first occasion to call on you," is not very complimentary in return for her kind invitation. "Occasion" comes unsought, but "opportunity" is desired. A thing is "impossible" which can not be performed in the very nature of things, but "impracticable" when viewed in the light of the limited powers of man. "Sufficient" is as much as one needs, and "enough" as one desires. "Miserable" refers to mental distress, and "wretched" to external circumstances. To "trust" implies confidence with respect to the future, and "credit" with respect to the past. Dickens to the contrary notwithstanding, "mutual" is only correctly applied to that which is interchangeable, as love, friendship, pleasure, joy, and "common" to that which is enjoyed alike or together. You may have a "common" friend or friend "in common," but not a mutual friend or mutual country. To "avow" means to declare openly, and perhaps with pride, but to "confess" means to declare what we know will be considered blameworthy. "Move" is often improperly used for "remove." A man may "move" his head or hand without "removing" either. To walk about a house is therefore to "move" from one position to another, but to change a residence is to "remove" from it.

These are a few of the most objectionable errors of newspaper writing, excluding the barbarisms of the reporter for the race-course or the police court, who may have "brass" enough "to go it blind" and "either "knock under" and "face the music" to the "gent" in the counting-room, or else to tell him a "cock and bull story," about not "knowing the ropes," with a promise to "beat his past record all hollow" if he will "let up" on him this time and "chuck" him over his "tin."—Cor. Louisville Courier.

SUN SPOTS.

A Suggestion That the Orb of Day Is Affected With Measles.

A fresh spot has appeared on the face of the sun, a very large one humanly speaking. It measures about twenty thousand geographical miles by seven thousand. Perhaps the sun does not think it excessive, having such a very broad face, and being able to accommodate a great number of pimples of the same size. But the extent sounds considerable, all the same. Besides, there are ever so many smaller ones, about the size of the earth, and, taking all together, we shall hardly be exaggerating the situation if we say there is "quite a rash." For much less we should call the doctor in. Indeed, we terrestial atoms could not rise to the dignity of such an eruption, not even if we put all our faces together and went shares in the same spot. We talk of having "the measles;" nobody thinks of counting them or asking: "How many?" But they are mere pinpoints, dots, specks. It is very different, however, with the orb "that rules the day." Astronomers keep a register of its eruptions, and book each new "measle" as it comes. They diagnose the phenomenon, and conjecture as to its causes and results, just as the doctors do over the baby's red-speckled body. And, like doctors, they can not stop the process. It must run its course, they say. Some day, perhaps, they will prescribe for the sun. If they already know its weight, its temperature and constitution, why should they not find out all about its digestion and habits? Is it temperate and addicted to a regular life? There is a good deal to be said on both sides. In a general way it is irreproachable, a model luminary, and a pattern to everybody else doing certain work conscientiously and regularly. Morally, too, no fault can be found with a body which is all this to a million answers the negro minstrel question, and never throws pearls before swine. Early to rise and early to bed it ought to be healthy, wealthy and wise. But is it? There is another side to the sun. When it is out of our sight, and beyond the scope of our vision of civilization, it could easily be immoderately . An excessive warmth characterizes its conduct. It does not get furiously hot over night. People bring in the sun to keep them warm. But this seems to make it get all the hotter. It must be all the more intolerable over the other hemisphere again, we have conflicting reports. There, too, it does and the evidence is trustworthy, it will not show itself sometimes for weeks together. They know it is there, or thereabouts, from the reflections cast on the sky. But, as for melting a glacier or liquifying an iceberg no such effects are forthcoming. This gratifies Polar bears, no doubt, but can not be styled improved behavior. After, all the Esquimaux are human beings, which even the best of bears are not. Still, as the homely saying goes, we should talk of men only as we know. Report is liable to be biased in the transit, or unreliable at the source. So, for ourselves, we ought to speak well of the great orb. That it does not as a rule take much notice of us, and that when as an exception, it does we grumble, is neither here nor there. Our temperature is the finest in the world, our climate second to none, and the security of our country from plague, pestilence, and famine from drought and flood, earthquake and hurricanes is the envy of all the inhabited earth. And for all this we have to thank the sun.—London Telegraph.

BARBER SHOPS.

Patrons Enjoying a Boon Denied by Their Brethren in Other Countries.

The truth of this statement was learned from the barber on North Calvert street, who declared that of all the places on earth the United States was the best place to get a clean, comfortable shave. This compliment to the barber shops of the land of the free was paid on the strength of the vast improvements made in barbers' chairs. A comfortable chair bears the same relation to a barber shop that a well-drawing stove does to the kitchen. The pride of a barber shop is the chairs. The barber may be skillful and swift, the soap pure and fragrant, the brush easy and gentle, the towels clean and white, but these altgether could not atone for the absence of an easy chair. To the United States belongs the credit of getting up barber chairs that are as easy as a feather bed.

Among the latest styles of chairs there are many diversities. There is a winter chair and a summer chair. Then there is the combination chair, which possesses some of the features of both. For summer use the latest fashion is a cane-chair. It is large and roomy and affords the greatest ease. A person can recline in it with as much comfort as on a lounge. For winter use there is the upholstered chair, which is a perfect gem for comfort. The combination chair is reversible, and can be used in winter and summer. The more fashionable barbers, however, do not advocate its use, but prefer a separate chair for winter and summer use. Many men just step into a barber shop to get a little rest and the head bathed. Then the easy chair acts like a charm. The easy chair has done much for the barber. In America there is more shaving done at the barber-shops than in all the balance of the world. In France the barber is engaged by the month, and calls at the house of the customer to ply his craft. In England most of the men shave themselves. Nowhere in Europe can you find an easy and comfortable barber shop. Americans find a great deal of trouble in getting a good shave abroad.—Baltimore American.

IN THE WINTER.

How Whaling Ships Winter in the Arctic Regions.

In the fall, just before it gets so cold that the ice forms, the ships huddle together, and each puts down two anchors, one at the bow and one at the stern, and these hold them from striking against the shore or one another until the ice forms around them and freezes them in solidly. Then the anchors and rudders are taken up, and, with lumber which they have brought from home, the whalers build a substantial house over the ship. Then they get the Esquimaux to build a sort of snow house over the wooden house, and so, with all this covering to protect them they manage to keep warm and comfortable with very little fire, however cold it may be out-of-doors. Sometimes they put in double windows, the inside ones of glass, as usual, and the outside ones being made of slabs of ice, like the windows of the igloos. The white men do not live in these temporary houses but lived on tops of the ships, but in the cabin and forecastle, just as if they were cruising out to sea. The house is simply put over the ship to keep the real places warm, and right well it does its work. This "house," however, is very useful as a place for taking exercise, for ship carpenting work, and for any small jobs that may be necessary. The Esquimaux also congregate there, especially about meal-time; when generous whalers treat them with sea-bread and weak tea sweetened with molasses.—Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, in St. Nicholas.

—An Indiana man who started in the poultry business with five dollars now sells more than $1,000,000 worth in a year. A man in an adjoining county who embarked in the poultry business one night without a cent in his pocket, is now boarding six months at the expense of the county.—Norristown Herald.

—In Brazil there are at least six cannibal tribes, and others whose custom it is for mothers to eat their dead children, pounding up the bones with maize, the mourning lasting till all is consumed.

A Primitive Tribe

Dr. Hunter describes a peculiar tribe in India which has preserved an extreme primitiveness. The people are called Leaf Wearers, because they wear the costume of Adam and Eve before the fall; or, more strictly speaking, they did so until the English persuaded them to adopt cloth.

In 1871 the English officer called together the clan, and after a speech handed out strips of cotton for the women to put on. They then passed in single file to the number of 1,900 before him, made obeisance to him, and were afterward marked on the forehead with vermillion as a sign of their entering into civilized society. Finally, they gathered the bunches of leaves which had formed their sole clothing into a great heap, and solemnly set fire to it. This leaf-wearing tribe had no knowledge of the metals till quite lately, when foreigners came among them, and no word existed in their native language for iron or any other metal. But their country abounds in flint weapons, so that the Juangs form a remnant to our own day of the stone age. "Their huts," writes the officer who knows them best, "are among the smallest that human beings ever deliberately constructed as dwellings. They measure about six feet by eight feet. The head of the family and all the females huddle together in this one shell, not much larger than a dog kennel." The boys and the young men of the village live in one large building apart by themselves; and this custom of having a common abode for the whole male youth of the hamlet is found among many aboriginal tribes in distant parts of India.

Our English Cousins.

LONDON.—In a recent trade-mark suit it was shown by sworn evidence that over nine million bottles of St. Jacobs Oil had been sold here during the past few years. Leading chemists certify that the sale of this remedy exceeds that of all others; and that it is being recognized as the best pain-cure ever discovered. In serious rheumatism it has accomplished astonishing results.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

An English writer says that the middle class Englishman, as a rule, does not buy books, except a few classics and professional treatises, but waits for his chance at the book club or circulating library. There are instances where authors are asked to lend their own copies by men of ten times their income. Wine and china may be bought, but books must be hired for, says the writer, the English are educated to the point of reading, but not to paying for books.

The season of big squashes and big pumpkins has arrived. By the way, if any of our farmer friends have any big squashes or any big pumpkins to spare, they can find room for them at our boarding house.

The Adrian Salvation Army will vacate their livery stable soon and remove to their former quarters on Maiden Lane, which is one block nearer to the Record office. This is a wise move on the part of Capt. Kirk.

The Courier Journal says: "The meanest man in Louisville gets up early and cuts the dry goods advertisements out of the morning paper, leaving nothing but the ordinary reading matter for his devoted wife."

There is a great deal of politics to the square inch down in Ohio this week. While our Buckeye brethren are engaged in the cheerful pastime of calling each other liars, traitors and pickpockets, the citizens of Michigan are harvesting their bountiful crops, attending their county fairs and booming business.

An exchange says: "When a Pinte-lian has acquired a fortune of $20, he joins the select circles." Yes, and when a Michigan editor has acquired a fortune of $2 he lights out on an excursion and recuperates until his fortune is exhausted. It beats all how many fortunes the editors of Michigan have won and lost during the past twenty-five years.

The dissection of Jumbo reveals the fact that he was not an elephant after all, but belonged to the now extinct Mastodon race. As a veteran showman Barnum still holds the lead. He has been humbugging the people for twenty-five years, and now the science of anatomy demonstrates the fact that his famous elephant Jumbo was a humbug also.

Do you know old Wiggins of our town? That's he sitting across the aisle there.

Very stingy, isn't he?

Stingy is no name for it. He keeps a coffin with a false bottom, and whenever he buries a wife the coffin is dug out and saved for the next one. In that way he has made one coffin do for four wives, and it's a good coffin yet.—Chicago Herald.

Of course, we have no personal knowledge on the subject, but we would venture to bet a half bushel of dirty collars that this Wiggins is none related to Wiggins, the weather prophet.

"Business is business," the old adage says. "And in this connection we rise to remark, that all the signs of the times indicate a business revival. Crops are bountiful and bring a fair price. The farmers have been economizing for several months and this fall they have got to buy something." "You are just right there," says farmer Jones, "but where shall we make our purchases?" Consult the advertising columns of this paper, Mr. Jones. Our advertisements are an infallible guide and point to big bargains as unerringly as the needle points to the pole.

Three orchestras, seven vocal quartettes, besides the brass bands, have been organized at Tecumseh, and the people are taking to the woods as fast as possible. "To rent" and "for sale" cards being seen on nearly every other house.—Detroit Evening News.

With the utmost respect for our enterprising and usually truthful city contemporary, we would remark that the young man who concocted this item must have just absorbed a snifter of old rye. We have lived in this community a good many years, in fact we immigrated to Tecumseh at a very early period of our existence, and we claim to be well posted on Tecumseh ethics and esthetics. Now, if there is any one thing more than another which the average Tecumseh citizen loves, it is music. It soothes the shattered nerves of our young men and solaces our love-sick maidens. The love of music which permeates this town, has percolated through the brick walls of the HERALD building, and captured our office force. The boss himself is an adept with the triangle, the job foreman fiddles on a fiddle, the pressman goes it blind on the jewsharp, our two lady compositors twang the guitar and our news foreman smokes a corn cob pipe. We shall expect the News to retract its slander before frost comes.

THE RAISIN PIONEERS.

ORGANIZATION OF A TOWNSHIP SOCIETY AND ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

Their First Meeting Held at the Presbyterian Church in Raisin on Thursday Oct. 1.

The old settlers of Raisin never do anything by halves. This fact was exemplified on Thursday last when they met at the Presbyterian church in East Raisin to organize a Pioneer Society. The Raisin Pioneers have frequently met with the county society, and the latter has held one meeting in that township a few years ago, but since the County Society has adopted the plan of quoting this portion of the vineyard in holding their meetings, our Raisin friends concluded that they would have a society of their own and institute the plan of holding regular annual reunions. A more favorable time could not have been chosen for the meeting. It was a beautiful day, almost as warm as summer, the farmers were through with their pressing fall work, and hence the whole township turned out to enjoy the feast. In addition to those present from Raisin, many were there also from the surrounding townships, especially old residents who had formerly lived in Raisin, but who now reside in some other town. Among the former Raisin residents were parties from Jackson and other places abroad.

The Presbyterian church in which the meeting assembled was an admirable place for such a gathering. The main auditorium of the church is capable of seating a company of about four hundred. A large basement below is divided into a kitchen and dining room, the latter provided with tables sufficient to accommodate one hundred and twenty guests at once.

Promptly at ten o'clock, the hour appointed for the meeting, the highway and commodious yard about the church were lined with teams and a large crowd had assembled. The company was composed mostly of gray-haired veterans, although there were many middle-aged people and a few young folks to be seen in the audience.

THE FORENOON SESSION.

Shortly after ten o'clock the audience was called to order by Alex. Richard, who officiated as President. A. G. Hall was chosen secretary for the day. The exercises were introduced with singing by the choir and prayer by Rev. H. W. Wright.

The following Constitution was then presented by Mr. Hall and adopted.

THE CONSTITUTION.

ART. I.—This Society shall be known as the Raisin Pioneer Society.

ART. II.—Any lady may become a member of the Society by signing the Constitution.

ART. III.—Any gentleman may become a member of the Society by signing the Constitution and paying the sum of 50 cents to the Treasurer, and each male member is to pay 25 cents annually thereafter.

ART. IV.—The officers of the Society shall consist of a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and an Ex. Com.

ART. V.—The officers shall hold their office one year or until their successors shall be elected.

ART. VI.—The duties of President, Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer shall be the same as they usually are in any other society.

ART. VII.—The duties of the Ex. Com. are to call meetings, provide suitable places for holding the same and see that all necessary arrangements are made.

ART. VIII.—The President shall be ex officio chairman of the Ex. Com.

ART. IX.—The annual meeting shall be held on the 1st Thursday of October in each year.

A permanent organization having been effected, the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year.

President—A. G. Hall.
Vice Pres.—E. L. Russell.
Secretary—Alex. Richard.
Treasurer—W. J. Holdredge.
Ex. Com.—Mrs. F. C. Rector, J. M. Green, Mrs. H. E. Wilson, Mrs. Jas. McIntyre, E. G. Wilson, H. B. Eaton.

Several of the above are persons who now live abroad, former residents of Raisin, and who came back to their old home to attend this gathering.

A quartette was sung entitled, The Modern Yankee Doodle, after which a recess was taken for dinner.

THE NOON HOUR.

The intermission of one hour to indulge in refreshments was most profitably spent. The banquet was called a "picnic lunch," but on comparing it with our dinners at home, we should call it a "good square meal." Cold meats, sandwiches, prime biscuit, cakes in endless variety, with excellent coffee and tea, tempted the appetite and filled up the guests. Over three hundred persons were fed, all of whom were bountifully provided for, and there were many basketsful of fragments gathered up at the close of the feast. This portion of the entertainment demonstrated the fact that the housewives of Raisin are worth having.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

Shortly after one o'clock the company was again called to order by chairman Richard, and the program was opened by the singing of Auld Lang Syne.

Prayer followed by Rev. H. W. Wright.

Then a song, Don't forget the Old Folks.

Mr. Richard then gave a brief address of welcome. His remarks were entirely impromptu, but they were fluently spoken and touched the hearts of all present. This meeting, he said, was properly a meeting of the old folks. Some of those who were with us seven years ago are gone. They have finished their earthly work and have entered a new life. We welcome the old men and women here to-day to banquet them, and to listen to their stories of the olden time. We younger ones are thinking of improvements to come. They are looking back into the past. But we wish to hear about those days when these pioneers were entering upon the life which was begun in our behalf.

The venerable "Uncle John" Richard followed with a most interesting speech. Mr. Richard is now living upon borrowed time, but his strong manly physique presents a striking appearance and he talks as fluently as many a younger man. It saddens my heart, said he, to see so many of the old pioneers and their children here to-day. We had many trials in an early day which people now know nothing of and yet we suffered but few real privations. We came here to work and did it. My first home was a shanty which contained a fire place, a stick chimney, a crane and chain upon which to hang the dinner pot, and a bake oven. The floor was laid of rough boards, but the women soon scrubbed them smooth. We broke up our land, put in our wheat, visited each other and had good times. Never got discouraged. Some of the settlers, when they got the ague, put back to the East, but when we old pioneers got the ague we took a little quinine and worked all the harder, and here we are to-day—grown old—but not ashamed that we are old. Such a meeting as this is a great satisfaction. It may be a farewell meeting to many of us.

Mr. Edmund Hall was the next speaker. Mr. Hall is over four score, but still enjoys fair health and hopes to live with us many years yet. I came to Michigan, said he, in March, 1834—57 years ago last March—and bought the place on which I now live. I was sick, went back east, stayed there a few months and then returned, but could only work about two hours a day. I concluded I ought to have a wife even if my health was poor. I picked out the girl I wanted, gave her two days to think it over and in eight days we were married, and I have never had cause to repent of it.

"Uncle John" Rector, who lived in Raisin for many years, but now resides in Tecumseh, favored the audience with some personal recollections. By the way, Uncle John's marriage was quite a romantic one, but as the story has been told before and is generally known, we will not repeat it here. His earliest pioneer life was in Ohio. Told a story of going to mill, himself and a neighbor, with a yoke of oxen. After going to three different places, and undergoing many hardships and mishaps, such as waking in the morning and finding their oxen gone, they finally heard of a steamboat load of flour just landed at Miami. They hurried on, but others too were anxious to get flour, and all they could get was three barrels, for which they had to pay $36. Now days, all the farmers have to do is to go to mill a few miles. He stays 3 or 4 hours and comes home with a grist of prime patent flour. Then we did well to get to our homes in 8 or 9 days.

Aunt Laura Haviland, who came to Mich. in 1828, gave a brief address. Their nearest neighbor was Darius Comstock. Once they missed the days of the week, she and her husband working all day Sunday. She mopped and baked and did a big Saturday's work, while he built a calf pen and did many other things. Along toward night her sister Phoebe came to see why they were not to meeting, thinking they must be sick. She called in her husband, who was positive it was Saturday. They then counted up the days from the last Sunday, thinking over what they had done each day, and found sure enough they were mistaken, they had worked all day Sunday. This and other reminiscences of sickness and trials through which their neighbors stood by them and helped them, manifesting the friendship of early days stronger and stronger. She called attention to her book, the third edition of which is now ready for the public.

Song—"The Man behind the Plough."

Mr. McFarland followed. His early life was spent in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., and his first settlement in Michigan was in the town of Fairfield.

The Chairman then showed, as an illustration of the growing temperance sentiment, a "pocket companion" of the olden time which would hold at least a quart. The flask, of the present day holds about half a pint.

Upon counting heads, it was found that 53 persons were present who resided in the state when Michigan was a territory, and 23 of them were 21 years old at that time—in 1837.

Mrs. Lucretia Hall told of her mother, Mrs. Raymond's, experience the first summer in Michigan. They had only the ground for a floor in their shanty and did their cooking out of doors. Mrs. Raymond, being very fond of green peas, had sowed a little patch, which to her dismay the hens scratched up. She, finding the guilty hen, killed her, took the peas from her crop and re-sowed them and so had her green peas after all.

Will Carleton's poem, "Out of the old house into the new," was recited by Mrs. R. H. Whitney, of Adrian.

Song—Home, Sweet Home.

B. I. Laing told of his father's refusing to pay a military tax. The tax collector was Alvah Doty, a great friend of his fathers, but as he was collector he must do his duty, so when Mr. Laing, who was a Quaker, and could not conscientiously pay the tax, refused to do so, Mr. Doty levied on Mr. Laing's clock and big arm chair; they were never taken away however, as some one else paid the tax. My father thought it was Uncle Alvah himself.

George Haight, of Jackson, went from here 27 years ago, thinks Raisin possesses more intelligence than any town he knows of, District No. 3 having educated 23 teachers in the old log school house, and many more since that time.

Fifty-one years ago the old church was organized at Mr. Rogers' house.

The meeting closed about four o'clock with the doxology, the afternoon's session having been nearly three hours in length, and the pioneers departed for their homes with happy hearts and smiling faces. The Raisin Society was most auspiciously inaugurated and we shall look for their annual reunions with much interest.

The Magazine of Art for October.

The Magazine of Art for October is an especially fine number, in text and illustrations. There are five full page illustrations, one of which, Whistler's full length portrait of Pablo Sarasarte, the violinist, is not only worth the price of the number, but of a year's subscription to the magazine.

The opening paper by Claude Phillips, is on that strange German genius Arnold Boecklin, of whose peculiar work a number of admirable illustrations are given. Following this is a paper on Granada, by David Hannay, showing by pencil as well as pen, the moorish beauties of that old Spanish town. Then comes a poem, by J. Arthur Blaikie, "Reconciliation," with one of Walter Crane's admirable decorative pictures. Miss A. Mary F. Robinson gives the fourth of her Profiles from the French Renaissance, and there is an entertaining paper on "Female Head Gear." The department of notes is well filled with news and crispe comment.—Cassell & Company, Limited, New York, $3.50 a year in advance.

The October number of the North American Review contains twenty-three Articles by as many different contributors—among whom are an English Cardinal, an American Admiral, two American Major-Generals, two American ex-Ministers to European Courts, an American Artist, an N. Y. Assemblyman, an ex-United States Senator, the Mayor of New York, an ex-Governor of New York, two distinguished American Men of Letters, and a famous American Financier—Manning, Ammen, Ben Butler, Fitz John Porter, Elihu B. Washburne, Wm. Waldorf Astor, his first appearance in literature; J. B. Eustis, of Louisiana, Wm. R. Grace, of New York, Theodore Roosevelt, Horatio Seymour, E. P. Whipple, Charles T. Congdon, Dorman B. Eaton, and some others less known. There is also a very characteristic private letter from Gen. Grant to his father, written from Milliken's Bend, just two days before he started in the Vicksburg Campaign. It is contributed by Col. Fred. Grant.

The October Babyhood gives its usual variety of topics interesting to parents, by its well-known editors, Marion Harland and Dr. Leroy M. Yale, and a corps of able contributors. Among the principal subjects are "The Precocious Baby," "Nursery Cookery," "The care of Baby's Eyes," "Contagion in Throat Troubles," "Art in the Nursery," "Thoughts on Home Training," "The Diet of Nursing Mothers," "Systematic Weaning," "Autumn Styles for Baby's Wardrobe" etc. A letter from Vienna on Austrian baby matters in general, and another from an American mother in Japan, will be read with interest. [15 cents a number; $1.50 a year. 18 Spruce Street, New York.]

BEERS POST TAKEN BY STORM.

At the last regular meeting of Beers Post, G. A. R., on Friday evening, the members of the Post were subjected to an onslaught somewhat new in their experience. About nine o'clock a rumor reached us that a delegation of ladies, some thirty or forty in number, had a few moments previously marched up the stairs leading to the G. A. R. hall, armed with crockery and lunch baskets. We resolved on the spot to make an effort to unravel the mystery or perish in the attempt. Accordingly we took our course to the stairway, quietly ascended the stairs, found the door of the hall open and unceremoniously walked in.

We found a jolly company assembled consisting of members of the Post with their wives and daughters. The ante-room was crowded with provision baskets, supper utensils and a boiler full of hot coffee. Upon enquiry we ascertained that the feminine portion of the G. A. R., that is the wives of the members, had planned a surprise on the Post, and this visit was the culmination of the plot.

The members of the Post have adopted a custom of serving hot coffee at their meetings, hence the ladies, by taking a good supply of cold refreshments, could provide quite a banquet.

After a few moments passed in social enjoyment the company was seated and the viands were distributed where they would do the most good. Before this part of the program was closed we had unraveled the mystery to our entire satisfaction. After the coffee and cakes were disposed of the company listened to brief speeches by Rev. Mr. Getchell, A. W. Mills and others. The G. A. R. boys were taken completely by surprise, not one of them having received the least intimation of the affair. But they acquitted themselves honorably, ate the refreshments cheerfully and thanked the ladies heartily. It was suggested by one of the speakers that the ladies should persevere in well doing and continue these lunch parties at intervals during the winter.

The strangest part of this strange tale remains for us to tell. How under the sun did it come to pass that thirty women kept such an affair a profound secret for three or four days?

Lavern Wheeler has taken a photo of Uncle Bill Nixon, sitting on a box in his shirt sleeves with scythe in hand. It is as natural as life.

H. B. Tallman is doing a rushing business at his cider mill west of the village. He manufactures cider, apple jelly, boiled cider, cider vinegar and sorghum syrup.

All indebted to us whose accounts are now due, will confer a favor by paying the same within the next ten days, and greatly oblige.

Mr. Herning's meat market was burglarized last Sunday night. The thief entered through a back window, rifled the money till and obtained $18.00. There is no clue to the perpetrator.

A. W. Slayton has formed a co-partnership with a N. Y. city man for the handling of Western hay. Gus shipped 700 tons last year and he thinks he can double it this season. Success to him.

Col. D. S. Curtis, of Washington, is out on his annual leave and is spending his time with his friends in Tecumseh and Clinton. He arrived last Saturday and will remain about ten days.

J. C. Brown will give a raffle for a silver watch to be followed by a dance at Sage & Cary's hall, in Macon, on Friday evening, Oct. 16th next. Good music will be in attendance. Everybody go.

Bert McNair attended the entrance examinations at Ann Arbor and passed all the branches without a single condition. He does not intend entering the University this fall, but will probably do so next year.

Fred. Fisher, who worked in the Tecumseh Paper Mill for five years, is now delivery clerk in Bowerfind's bakery at Adrian. Fred has a good position there and has become one of the fixtures of that institution.

Mrs. Asa Rosacrans has been spending several weeks with her daughter, Mrs. C. V. Hicks, at Oscoda Mich. She returned home last week and was accompanied by Mrs. Hicks, who will remain in town for a short visit.

Mrs. Brooks, of Clinton, attained her 95th birthday on Saturday the 26th ult, and during that week she knit a pair of stockings. How many young ladies, 20 years of age, are there in Clinton, who could knit a pair of stockings in one week?

There are only three surviving members of the first Constitutional convention of Michigan: Hon. John J. Adam, of this village; Hon. Geo. Howell, of Macon; and Hon. Robert B. Morris, who was a delegate from Oakland Co., and now resides at Snow Hill, Maryland.

William Heidermann, a German, working for Mr. Jonathan Green, in Raisin, was thrown from a horse last week, breaking his right leg between the knee and ankle. Dr. C. M. Woodward was called, who reduced and dressed the fracture, and the man is now quite comfortable, under the circumstances.

Phillip DePuy brought into our office one day last week, half a bushel of Victor potatoes, that will do to brag on. Nine potatoes filled the half bushel basket, and the largest one weighed 3 pounds and 10 ounces. This opens the big potato campaign in fine style and we should now like to hear from other parties.

It is in dispute whether the saw mill in Raisin known as the Cecil Clark mill, which recently burned, is the tenth or twelth mill that has burned on that particular spot during the past thirty years. After all it is not worth disputing about. To get within two saw mills of the truth is coming pretty near it, to say the least.—Adrian Record.

Sam James was in town last Sunday.

Harry Snell was in town last Sunday.

Earl Sheldon spent last Sunday in Toledo.

Frank Snedicor, of Dundee, was in town last Monday.

T. J. Kennedy, of Battle Creek, spent a few days in town last week.

Mr. Aaron Bruce recently sold a three year old Banker colt to Morenci parties for $400.

Geo. Bostwick returned from Eaton Rapids last Tuesday, looking greatly improved in health.

The hop at Armory Hall was a great success—socially—and the boys will repeat it in the near future.

A large sheet containing a full list of the general delivery postoffices is posted up in the Tecumseh office.

Rev. Mr. Lucas, of Greeley, Colo., and Miss Louie Brown, of Toledo, O., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Sutton.

Fadover informs us that Mrs. Fadover says that if the frost holds off ten days longer, we shall escape a freeze until about the eighteenth of October.

O. P. Bills got home from Harbor Point last week looking as bronzed and healthy as though he had spent the summer on a cattle ranch. Harbor Point is a good place to go to during the hay fever season.

Prof. Hammond is keeping bachelor's hall for two or three weeks, while his wife is visiting with her relatives at White Pigeon. The Professor says that he doesn't enjoy the sport half as well as he used to do.

Gainsley has now got his new stock of goods in place. He has a new stock throughout and a very neat store. His goods are bought at head-quarters at the lowest cash prices, and he is prepared to offer big bargains.—Read his announcement on the 8th. page.

In our item off the repairs of the Baptist church, published last week, we said that the recent improvements had cost several hundred dollars. This statement was too modest by half, and the ladies demur. We are promised a few statistics soon which will place the real facts before the public.

D. W. Clark has a California squash at his store. There is nothing very remarkable about that, but when we add that the squash measures 6 feet, 2 inches in circumference and weighs 131 pounds, it becomes an item that is worthy of record. It was raised by Jas. W. Brown on the old Deacon Conkling farm in Raisin.

Last evening was a bad one for a tent show, nevertheless the Whitney Family gave a first class variety entertainment to a small audience. The contortionist was the best ever in Tecumseh, and the singing and music were excellent, as was also the tumbling. When they visit Tecumseh again they will be sure of a full house.

Mr. I. G. Rawson of Rochester, N. Y., has purchased the confectionery stock and tea business of Will T. Eccles, and took possession on Friday last. Mr. Rawson comes here well recommended, and seems to be well posted in his business and a genial gentleman. We commend him to the good wishes of our citizens and bespeak for him a liberal patronage.

About two dozen men and boys shivered through five innings of base ball Tuesday afternoon between the Tecumseh and Adrian nines. The Tecumseh club ran short of men and had to fill in with three "kid" players and consequently were "done up" in short order by their opponents, the score standing 14 to 4 in Adrian's favor at the end of the fifth innings when the game was called on account of darkness.

A small audience greeted Pauline Markham in "Dolly's Luck" last Monday evening. The troupe labored under the disadvantage of playing to a small audience on a small stage which would not admit of one of their best scenes and it was omitted. Pauline Markham fully sustained her reputation as an actress of great merit, and she was very ably supported. Had the price of admission been lower she would have undoubtedly had a much larger house.

Mrs. M. A. Freeman wishes to announce to her patrons that she is now placing upon her shelves a remarkably large stock of fall and winter millinery goods and that they must not fail to call and inspect them. Hair goods have been added to her stock, of which a complete assortment will be kept on hand. Miss Dingman has charge of the trimming department, which is a sufficient guarantee that this branch of the business will be well maintained.

Mr. M. F. Brown has been rearranging the pictures in his show window, and they make an elegant show.—A brief visit at his rooms yesterday was well repaid. He is taking the finest photographs that can be produced anywhere, for he introduces all the new improvements as fast as they come out. His work is first class and his scale of prices is fixed to meet the stringency of the times. There is no reason why people should go out of town for their work, when they can get just what they want at home.

A. H. Wood, and Crane & Wood, clothing merchants of Adrian have purchased the clothing stock of Dan Benedict and will incorporate his stock with their own. The change will make one less clothing store in Adrian.

While at Tecumseh last Saturday evening we enjoyed the hospitality of the Patterson house, H. S. Lee, proprietor, with Capt. A. P. Foster at the helm as manager. The Patterson is one of the best kept hotels in southern Michigan, and is centrally located, convenient to the railroads and business portion of the town.—Clinton Local.

Some of the members of the Blissfield Common Council neglect their official duties, and the Advance hauls them over the coals in this wise.

There is no excuse for any member of the council pleading "too much business," as a reason he cannot attend to village matters. If he hasn't the time to devote to it and isn't willing to, he ought not to have accepted the office, but having accepted should make room for some one who will devote some attention to the interests of the village.

We clip this item from the Saline Observer. It is very pretty reading, but will the editor please rise and interpret it.

The Indian summer is with us when the "soft balmy breezes blow through the trees-es, calling forth nasal sneez-es from the young man who squeezes, his sweet heart in his arms," while they sit upon a cold marble slab on the rear end of God's acre, quarreling because that cross-eyed girl from Tecumseh had the audacity to wink at him at the social the other evening.

Some lads on the East Side had wrenched a plank out of the sidewalk on the west side of the M. E. parsonage, near the church, last week to make their "hoops jump," and had replaced the same without fastening. Last Sunday morning as R. P. Wood and wife and Miss Effie Bangs were passing over the plank one end was thrown up and Mrs. Wood was thrown down and severely, though not seriously, hurt. It was a narrow escape for the lady.—Hudson Post.

The Morenci and Hillsdale fairs are in full blast this week, and both are largely attended. The entries at the Morenci fair are about 600 more than at any previous year. Mr. Beakes, of the Record, is at Morenci, and is entered in class A 1, to compete for the gold mounted snuff-box which will be given to the best looking editor in the county, as a discretionary premium. We are inclined to think our neighbor will bring home the snuff-box, unless Scove Stacy is a competitor.—Adrian Press.

The board of managers of the three state asylums for the insane, met at Traverse city on Wednesday last. The only business transacted of interest in this locality was that of transferring Lenawee, Monroe, Washtenaw and Ingham counties from the Pontiac district and attaching them to Kalamazoo. The state was districted in proportion to population, and with a view to convenience of access. Judge Geddes was a member of the board, and was accompanied by his wife. Before returning home they visited Petoskey, Mackinaw, and other places of interest in Northern Michigan.—Adrian Press.

The Adrian Times of last week contained a lengthy sketch of the new County Court House, which concluded as follows

And thus stands the new Lenawee county court house, nearly completed, and handsomer, better and more substantial than our people had a right to expect for the money invested. Much credit is due the architect and the plucky assignees of the original contractors, for, owing to the fact that the original contractors took the contract at an exceedingly low figure, the latter will lose a large amount of money, instead of, as they should, realizing a fair margin of profit. They have, however, gone on with the work, doing everything in first-class shape, and slighting not the smallest particular of the structure. Competent judges think that they will lack rom $5,000 to $8,000 of coming out ven on the contract.

THE EASTERN MICHIGAN INSANE ASYLUM

During the recent session of Detroit Conference there occured an afternoon when the writer thought he had leisure to visit this institution whose name forms the title to this article.—So, in company with several brethren from different parts of the State he walked out from Pontiac to the building in question.

The dimensions of the structure are far beyond the conceptions he had formerly entertained, but by some mischance the notes taken on the spot have been mislaid and your readers will be spared many statistics that might otherwise have been inflicted upon them.

The immense building stands nearly in the center of a farm of three hundred acres, most of which is devoted to general farm crops, ten acres being in garden and forty acres reserved for lawn and groves surrounding the edifice. The grounds contain a fine conservatory, numerous flower beds interspersed with shrubs and trees of various kinds, approached by winding drives and foot paths and forming a rural picture worthy of the poet's pen or the artist's pencil. The lawns contain facilities for playing croquet, lawn tennis and other out of door amusements.

Entering the large hall the party were met by a gentlemanly attendant who seemed to take pleasure in showing the guests how the State cares for its unfortunates. First they entered a ward for gentlemen patients. There are thirteen of these wards, each one a hundred and seventy feet in length, and containing a hall twelve feet high and twelve feet wide, and running the entire length, with rooms on each side twelve feet square for the accommodation of patients. Each patient has one of these rooms to himself. The furniture consists of a bed (spring bottom) a table, chair, commode, etc. The room is warmed by means of a register.

The hall and grounds are free to the patients during the day, but at night they are confined to their rooms. Each hall has a large alcove lighted by a bay window, furnished with tables and other facilities for indoor amusements, (cards, dominos, checkers, etc.) There is also a luxuriously furnished parlor supplied with musical instruments accessible to all patients during each day. The dining rooms connected with each ward are models of convenience, which could only be described by a good housewife.

The patients seemed to look upon the visitors with considerable interest but manifested no disposition to injure them.

Passing from this ward the procession was conducted down stairs and through the great kitchen. Here are gigantic coffee urns (capacity 220 gals.) and conveniences for doing the cooking for eight hundred patients with their attendants numbering in all about one hundred. The party were interested particularly in the oven, which consists of a large disk sixteen feet in diameter, surmounted by a dome and rotated by an unseen power. While the baking is being done one man is continually employed putting bread in the oven and another taking out the loaves which are always sufficiently baked. The capacity of the oven is sixty loaves per hour. The patients have their choice of white or brown bread, salt or hop rising, at all meals. Such are the conveniences for distributing food from this kitchen that the whole army of eaters can be supplied in fifteen minutes from the time the supples are started.

The conductors then led the way to the laundry where enormous washing machines were cleansing the soiled linen. The wringer which does all the wringing of the institution, except the wringing money from the people, deserves special notice. It is a large copper tub holding about two bushels; the sides are perforated with holes about a half inch in diameter. When this tub is filled a lever is pulled and it commences to revolve at the rate of twelve hundred revolutions per minute, the centrifugal force throwing the water through the perforators against a funnel shaped tin screen which carries the slops to the sewer.

The ironing is done partly by machinery and partly in the good old way. The engine rooms were next visited. Here are four large boilers each nine feet in diameter and twenty-five feet long, furnishing heat for the building and motive power for machinery. A large 100-horse power engine, with fly wheel sixteen feet in diameter runs night and day; furnishes all the power needed in all the departments. A 60 horse power engine stands idle, but ready to be brought into use at a moments notice, should any accident stop the large one. A large fan, capable of moving sixty thousand cubic feet of air per minute, can be used at will for reducing the temperature of the wards during the heated term. A 20 horse power engine is pumping ten barrels of water per minute out of the well into a large reservoir higher than the roof of the building, from which all the inmates are supplied with an abundance of pure water. Patients are found employed in all rooms, it being part of the policy of the physician in charge to allow them to work or play as they desire. Of course there is sufficient force of employees to do the work but when the patients are working the employees are guards. Two hospitals are in process of erection and patients are employed wheeling brick, mixing mortar, etc., just for fun.

Returning to the main hall the party were shown the library, 15,000 volumes, and the chapel, capable of seating four hundred people, used for religious meetings and also for concerts, operas, etc.; Here the male and female patients are allowed to attend together. The ladies' wards are counterparts of the gentlemen's in form and size and generl arrangement. The entire institution containing twenty-six wards, each capable of accommodating forty patients. As the party passed out the scribe drew his note book and began to scribble. He was accosted by a lady, "What are you doin, making picters?" No, taking notes. "I never see nothin here worth notin,' I've been here seven years!" Here the conversation closed. At the door the doctor said: "Was your conductor all right?" "O, yes!" "He has been under treatment for fifteen years." Fancy the feelings of the pilgrims.

Once outside the company started to walk around the building, but were soon met by a placard—"at this point visitors will please turn back." So they stopped, soon a lady at an upper window and in a most bewitching manner threw a kiss at the crowd which no one of the party seemed to wish to appropriate to himself alone, and with this sweet memory lingering in their minds they wended their way back to Pontiac. A. C.

The Patterson House has had a big run of transients for the past few days.

Ed Williamson expects to go to New York the last of this week on a business trip.

Mr. L. E. Dean, of Schuyler Co., N. Y., is visiting Mrs. M. J. Bigelow and daughter this week.

J. J. Daly, Tecumseh's hustler in the boot and shoe trade, has a new card on the 8th, page.—Read it and be wise.

Mr. Fairfield, junior member of the firm of Sutton, Fairfield & Co., started on Monday afternoon, last, for New York to purchase new goods.

The Baptist church being now in condition to use, regular service will be held there next Sunday. Rev. F. Adkins will occupy the pulpit.

Mrs. W. M. Butler has been spending the last few weeks with relatives and friends at Lansing and while there took a trip to Hillsdale and was there the guest of Supt. Cannifl and wife.

Mrs. Lydia Horton and daughter, of Arkansas, who have been visiting at D. C. Barnes for a few days, left on Monday last for home. They will stop on the way at Mendon, Mich., to visit friends there.

The early closing movement has been auspiciously begun, but we would respectfully ask why it is confined to the dry goods, furniture, clothing and hardware trades? Why wouldn't the same plan work with the other branches of business? It might discommode village customers somewhat to close the grocery stores and meat markets at an early hour, but we see no reason why other stores could not close early without detriment to themselves or customers.

Lenawee County W. C. T. U.

The annual meeting of the Lenawee County W. C. T. U. will be held in the M. E. church, at Addison, the 14th and 15th of October. First session will commence at 2.30 o'clock P. M., Wednesday. All local unions are requested to send delegates. Places where unions have once existed should also, be represented, and all who can attend will be made welcome. A program has been arranged for Wednesday evening, and Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, of Jackson, is engaged to speak Thursday evening. Meetings free to all, and a full attendance is desired.

MRS. S. M. COOK, Secretary.

HOW ANIMALS TALK.

A Farmer's Claim That All Animals Can be Taught to Understand Language.

"If you talk with the creatures in your back yard, they soon get not only to understand your general meaning, but to reply with modifications of sound that are meant for you in particular. One or two hens in a flock will show particular aptitude in telling you what they think. Some horses have, or can have, an hebrew of sounds, and express very nice gradations of dislike or pleasure, even up to distinct laughter. Other animals laugh, naturally, birds, with articulate sounds. Some years since I owned a horse with which I undertook to drive to a neighboring town over the hills in winter. A spot of hidden ice suddenly tripped her, and for a time it was impossible for her to get up. But my efforts that entirely exhausted me, I finally got her on foot again. She never forgot it. My approach to the stable was invariably welcomed by cordial neighs, and that not sufficing, she would put her head affectionately on my shoulder or under my arm. On another occasion a pet Morgan called me while I was engaged fifty rods from the barn, with loud and persistent calls, that I instantly understood meant trouble. Going hastily to the stables I found the cows had broken down a door and were capable of doing mischief. As soon as I approached the horse gave a satisfied whinny, followed by a long sigh of relief, and went to eating quietly.

"But for real vocalization the fowls surpass both animals and birds. I have had one rooster that had a remarkable power of laughing. No one could possibly hear him without doing as he would when Gough laughs—laugh with him. Now, a dog has a diffused laugh all over, but especially concentrates a crinkle in his tail. The dog's tail is the most cultured tail among animals. In a fully laughed dog it talks. The tail of a cow has no more sense than an ox-goad, and a horse's tail is not much wiser. Tags even lash flies in a loose way that shows they don't know, except in a general way, where the flies are. It was necessary that man should lose such a brainless appendage. As the brain increases the tail decreases, and laughing and talking go over to the brain.

"In studying animal language we must study not only their power of adaptability to us, but our power of adaptation to them. That is, having ourselves evolved our language from the sign and emotional stage, there still is in us a capacity for going back to those creatures that have not yet come up to an intelligent language; we can put forth an effort to meet them half way. Prof. Bartholomew, with his trained horses, talks with them in equine language. It needs to drop words and throw expressions into terms. In that way and for that reason sing-ing brings us nearer to the most of our friends than articulation. Yet if we constantly talk to animals as if they understood us, we shall find ourselves involuntarily modifying our sounds, and shall be surprised to find how much they evidently comprehend our meaning.

"The relations which we assume to animals rapidly modifies their articulation. It is not the parrot only that learns to talk from human intercourse, but all animals and birds as well. You have only to test this in your own yard or on your farm. I have a horse that, when purchased, knew human beings from some unpleasant side, and was accustomed to put on terrible pretences of devouring stable boys. They had probably done evil to be eaten. She gave vocal look except a snort of anger, and decided evil of it. She's now capable of expressing herself in a way that would satisfy Dean Swift. There is a consciousness in her, not so that she is conversing with me, and she has quite a good range of affection and injury."—Boston Herald.

A LECTURE TO MEN.

Some Reasons Why Wives Should Be Posted Upon Their Husbands' Affairs.

What is my opinion of wives knowing their husbands' business? I think every wife should know exactly all the business of her husband. It may not be necessary to tell her the worries and anxieties of it, but all that portion in which her suggestions and her tact would be valuable, should be known to her, and she should also have such knowledge as would be of vital importance in settling the estate, in case of the death of its head. Too many men think, because their wives are only women, they don't have any idea of money except to spend it, but I am here to say that the wives, on an average, have just as much business sense as their husbands, and in many cases very much more, as the records will show. If a woman is extravagant and careless, a knowledge of what her husband's business is will often act as a restraint upon her, and unless she is a natural-born fool, will cause her to make an effort to cut her garments according to her cloth. Occasionally a wife does not want to know anything of her husband's affairs because she thinks she has enough care at home, but that kind of a wife is scarce, and the man who husbands her is an unfortunate, whose lot would have been happier if he had remained a bachelor. I believe in the unity of husband and wife, and the unity of material matters is almost as important as that of the spirit, indeed, true unity of spirit means unity in all things. A good wife is a man's best friend, and her sympathy is valuable, even though she has not the wisdom of Solomon. Mr. Brown always told me his business, and Mr. Brown left a widow who is not dependent on the world, nor does she have to ask a man to conduct her business for her now that her natural protector is no more.—Merchant Traveler.

—A story is told by the Presbyterian of a New York woman who was asked to add her name to a subscription list for a charitable purpose. "I can not," was the reply; "I did all I could afford to do for charity during the winter. I went to the charity ball, the kirmess, and attended a number of private theatrical entertainments given for benevolence."

—Portland, Ore., has a new high school building which cost $125,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Marriage may be defined as a temporary social alliance, entered into for the purpose of acquiring a cheap notoriety through the medium of divorce.—Philadelphia Times.

—The indications are that the great Lick Observatory in California will be completed in 1887, a French firm having successfully solved the problem of casting the disc, which is to be three feet in diameter.

—A late critic gives it as his opinion that the word "rye" in Burns' song, "Coming Thro' the Rye," means river, and not a field; that the author intended the word to mean crossing on the stepping stones in the river Rye.—Chicago Herald.

—The wife of the people in England go wool-gathering just as they do here, it seems. Last year there were 26,000 letters posted in England without any address upon them, and in 1,600 of them coins and money were enclosed.

—A book has been published which advocates the eating of non-carnivorous insects. As Abraham Lincoln once remarked: "For those who like this sort of thing it is quite probable that this sort of thing is just about the sort of thing they would like."

—The late Dr. Holland evidently thought there was a better way of spending one's time than in card playing. He described it as "the resort of the starving soul and intellect, which has never in any way linked to itself tender, elevating, or beautiful associations."—Congregationalist.

—There's nothing new in the idea of pneumatic tubes. A pneumatic conveyor for letters, etc., was suggested by Dr. Papin, in 1695, patented by Madhurst in England, 1810, on the compressed air principle, and by Valentine, in 1824, on the exhaust principle.—N. Y. Sun.

—The First Kiss of Love:

Her cheeks are flushed, her eyes are wet,
She heaves a gentle sigh;
Her pulses quicken, she scarce knows yet
Why she is so nervous grown;
What magic spell is this that troubles so
With fluttering thoughts and fears?
The first time she has felt her heart
Had a sweet, sweet sweetheart.

—The largest and finest collection of orchids in this country is owned by Hon. Erastus Corning, of Albany, for which he was offered and refused $75,000 by a syndicate. The late Mrs. Morgan, of New York, left a choice collection valued at $50,000.—Albany Journal.

—In Portland, Me., recently an ingenious device was discovered for evading the liquor law. A lead pipe was carried up a chimney to the second story of the house, and investigation showed that it was carried beneath the ground across the yard to another building fully one hundred feet away. Here, beneath the floor in the second story, were two barrels of beer, the pipe running up the wall to connect them with.—N. Y. Post.

—It is said that there is not a gambling-house in Boston which is not protected by a thick, bolted door, at which a watchman always stands. Electric communicators warn the occupants as soon as any unknown person comes in sight, so that by the time an entrance has been effected by battering down the door, the chips, money, and other paraphernalia are all secreted and the gamblers are chatting and smoking together in the most innocent manner. It is practically impossible for the police to find a game in progress.—N. Y. Post.

—"Look here, Ransom," said an old negro to a young fellow, "I doan' min' yer 'sociatin' wid' my daughter, but I druther yer wouldn't come roun' my house no mo'. Time 'fore de last what ye wuz heah I missed er water bucket, an' de las' time de bridle wuz gone, an' now, ez I has a use for de saddle, I druther yer wouldn't come heah. I doan' say that yer ain't hones', but such curs things happens while yer is in de neighborhood, so jes' ter please er ole man, what ain't enjoyin' very good health, pleas doan' come round dis house no mo'."—Arkansas Traveler.

—This is the latest parrot story: "A common gray Polly, having been brought from Guinea by a sailor with a coarse, rough voice and afflicted with a cough, the parrot learned to imitate the exact tones of his master, even to the cough, so closely that the sound of his voice was often mistaken for that of the sailor. It was afterward taken in hand by another instructor and taught a softer tone, but it never forgot the harsh voice of its former master, and often amused bystanders by relapsing into sea slang, interspersed with the asthmatic cough of the sailor."—Philadelphia Press.

—The explorers of the Congo Valley are surprised by the crudity of life there. The natives have no domesticated beasts of any sort, nor do they raise or catch any animals to eat, as they know nothing of flesh as food. No semblance of clothing is worn, and diet is practically confined to spontaneous products of the soil. Letters from missionaries say, too, that the negroes there are so low in mentality that any hope of Christianizing them must be based on a long and patient course of intellectual training. They are too densely ignorant to comprehend the simplest statements of doctrine.—N. Y. Herald.

Helen Jackson's Last Days.

A friend of Mrs. Helen Jackson, writing in the Overland Monthly of her last days, says: "Her illness was a painless one, a gradual prostration of all the vital energies under the influence of a powerful and irresistible disease. Throughout the long and trying ordeal neither her patience nor her courage ever failed. Whenever the conversation turned upon her ailment, with its mysterious symptoms and steady disorganization of the system, baffling the physicians' skill and thwarting the well-meant efforts of her friends, she was always first to turn the subject, saying with a reassuring little smile, token of the brave spirit's triumph over the failing body: 'Now let us talk of something more pleasant.' And she would so completely ignore her weak bodily condition, and enter into conversation with such spirit and zest, that one forgot she was an invalid, and was conscious only of the clear, analytical mind, with its flashes of humor, and of the great, generous heart."

FRENCH DETECTIVE POLICE.

A Bad System, a Small Body and a Large Amount of Work to Do.

There is, or has been until very lately, an idea that the prefecture de police in Paris commands the services of a large number of agents, all able and some of exceptional ability in their peculiar calling, who devoted themselves entirely to the crime, who could immediately be launched on the track of a criminal, and of whom some had no ostensible connection with the prefecture, and were thus able to throw the most suspicious malefactors off their guard. From M. Mace's book, plain and prosaic and shattered many cherished legends, it appears that the "agents de la Sureté" are a small body with a vast amount of work to do, and that the system under which they work is about as bad as it possibly can be. As to their numbers, his statements are surprising. In 1879 there were all told in 237 men in the service. In 1881 there were, including the Police des Mœurs, fused in that year with the Sureté, and of whose special work we do not for obvious reasons wish to speak, 306 agents; in 1883 apparently about the same. At first sight this may seem a large number, and certainly, if the perfecture commanded the services of some 240 or 250 skillful detectives, excluding the Police des Mœurs, always at its disposition, it would be well able to grapple with crime; but, as a matter of fact, it has nothing of the kind. These men are not all skillful detectives by any means. Some are or were sent from other branches of the service as a punishment. Some are recruits who have been very carelessly enrolled, and it appears from one passage in M. Mace's book that the best of the recruits are apt to leave early if they see their way to other employment. Then from the total number must be deducted the considerable staff required for office and clerk's work, and a certain number on the sick list, so that practically the administration has not more than 200 men at its disposal. The work which these agents have to do is enormous. In addition to this not inconsiderable amount of work the agents had to deliver personally 6,193 summones, notices and letters from the Parquets. Of this part of their duties M. Mace speaks strongly, and seemingly with good reason. The unfortunate agents, with only a short night's rest before them, have to issue forth in the evening—for they never get the official documents before—and to discover all sorts of disagreeable persons lodged in the bad quarters of Paris, where, on the part alike of the landlords and of the retiring guests, there is the strongest possible dislike to intrusion, and sometimes a marked tendency to make the delivery of undesired letters as unpleasant as possible for the bearers. Needless to say that the function is arduous and perilous, and that it constitutes a severe addition to the day's work.—Saturday Review.

Bees In India.

The Englishman, of Calcutta, states that the experiment made by Mr. J. C. Douglas, who has imported a hive of Italian bees, has been crowned with complete success. The bees appear to thrive admirably at Calcutta, and have yielded during the present season eighty pounds of splendid honey. This is considered to be a proof that a lucrative industry may be established in India, and a new dainty placed at the disposal of teeming millions of its land cultivators. We fear that this exultation is premature. The experiment of establishing bees in countries of perpetual summer has been tried before now, and has failed signally. For a time the bees work diligently, and lay up rich stores of honey for their winter food. But so soon as the bee discovers that there is no winter, and that from year's end to year's end the flowers offer him a daily supply of nectar, he ceases to store up honey. Indeed, did the bee do otherwise, he would forfeit much of his title to our respect as an industrious and thrifty creature. Did he labor as he does, ceaselessly and earnestly, for no other purpose than to store up honey for which he can never have any use, he would show himself to be but an idiotic kind of insect, and in no way superior in moral status to the human miser.—London Standard.

Novel Reading.

Young Society Belle—"Oh, Dr. Portman, I am so glad I met you. I have such an important question I want to ask you. I am so anxious, you know not to do anything that I do not think my pastor could fully approve, and I do want to know if you think novel reading is wrong?"

Dr. Portman—"No, my dear young lady. I think I may say that I do not deem novel reading a sin."

Young Society Belle—"Oh, I am so glad. I told the girls I did not think you would."

Dr. Portman—"No, my dear young friend. I think that the reading of history and science, and works of travel, is highly salutary to the youthful mind. And I am quite sure that would be novel reading to you."—Louisville Journal.

—A good wig of white hair, says an American tonsorial artist, costs about $40, but (and this is a secret of the trade and can only be told in whispers) the material of which these wigs are made is clipped from the festive goat, and never from the human head. A peculiar soft, silky kind of snowy-white hair originates on the Angora rabbit. A perfectly white and abundant wig of white human hair would cost $1,000 at least.—Chicago Times.

THE DEMI-SEASON.

Dresses Which Are Made for Traveling and Shopping Purposes.

For demi-season dresses for traveling, shopping and for morning wear navy blue alpaca is being made up in imitation of the graceful gowns worn during the summer by the Princess of Wales and her daughters. For very young ladies silver braid or white mohair has formed the trimmings, the mohair being used as a narrow vest, high collar and straight cuffs, with rows of braid along the edges, and also on the sash draperies that are worn with a kilt skirt. For autumn dresses black braid, or else dark blue Hercules braid, will take the place of metal braids, and either velvet or plush will be used for the vest, cuffs and collar. Long overskirts that are made like the housemaid skirts, and looped up on one side or both, will be used with these dresses, and there may be rows of braid or of velvet ribbon for the trimming. A side panel of velvet will be chosen by those who prefer pleated skirts with Greek draperies. The new shade of brown called lynx brown, is also being made up in mohair and alpaca dresses for the three autumn months, when canvas dresses will be too thin and cloth too heavy for comfort. Gilt braid will be sparingly used on such dresses, rather as a piping or edging for brown velvet than in many showy rows or in the vermicelli patterns lately used. Wide wool galloons and wool laces that are embroidered lightly with gilt are rich trimmings for lynx brown mohairs, while silver threads are wrought in similar trimmings for gray dresses.

The mixed red and blue laces are also being used to trim blue alpacas, and with these are sometimes seen velvets of the two colors, in stripes or in very small figures, for the small accessories of the corsage. The correct idea, however, in such dresses is to have them exceedingly plain, depending on their fine fit for their beauty. When lace is used on mohair, it is most stylish when confined to the lower skirt; a single deep fall of lace, very slightly gathered, crosses the front and side gores, or else there are two or three narrower ruffles of lace across the front, and several rows are placed up the left side in the space left uncovered by the drapery. Still another plan is that of edging side pleats with narrow wool lace, and forming the front and sides of the skirt of these pleats. When braid is chosen for trimming, the new fancy is to form the front breadth of two very wide box pleats, covering these with clusters of cross rows of the braid, lengthening each row in the cluster, and curling up the ends toward the sides. A pointed plastron made in the same way then trims the corsage, and smaller points are on the sleeves. To complete such a suit for traveling there should be a long blue or brown cloth ulster, and a bonnet of rough blue straw with the brim covered with blue or brown velvet, as is the most becoming to the wearer. A rosette of braid or of wool lace, or some "donkey's-ear loops" of wool or of crape, should trim the close round hat of felt or straw that many young ladies prefer to bonnets.—Harper's Bazar.

UNDERTAKERS.

How and Why the Term Came to Be Applied to "Funeral Directors."

The earliest known use of this word as applied to conductors of funerals is by Young, who has the couplet:

While rival undertakers hover round,
And with his spaid the sexton marks the ground.

The present use of the word is no doubt derived from its primary meaning, one who stipulates to do anything, or undertakes the management of any affair. Two hundred years ago a class of people known as upholders were usually called upon to take charge of the funerals. Thus the poet Gay says:

The upholder, rueful harbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath.

Now, upholders were dealers in second-hand furniture, old clothes and the like, and perhaps were so called because they were so often resorted to as the last resource of failing credit. As these persons were able from their stock of cheaply purchased material to supply what was needed at funerals at less expense than the regular merchant or haberdasher, they came to be thus employed, and also to furnish houses. In time the more ambitious of this class confined their business to the furnishing of houses only, and dealt in goods both new and old, and to avoid the confounding of their business with that of the funeral managers styled themselves upholsters, a name changed latter to upholsterers. Subsequently the more pretentious members of the clan of upholsterers assumed the name of undertakers, deriving the cognomen logically enough from the signification of its parts in the Saxon tongue. An undertaker, one who takes in hand a business or task, or renders himself responsible for its performance. Or perhaps the idea of the word was taken from the French name for the same office, entrepreneur, though the primary idea of the French word is rather that of one who bids for a particular task. Clarendon in his "History," gives the word with a general meaning in the line, "Antrim was naturally a great undertaker." Honeywood, in "The Good-Natured Man" of Goldsmith, speaks thus of Croaker: "His very mirth is an antidote to all gayety, and his appearance has a stronger effect on my spirits than an undertaker's shop.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

—A noted statistican, Edward Atkinson, insists that there is an abundance of room yet in this world. The 1,400,000,000 persons supposed to be on the globe could all find easy standing room within the limits of a field ten miles square, and by the aid of a telephone could be addressed at one time by a single speaker. In a field twenty miles square they could all be comfortably seated.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Dr. C. C. Abbott, the naturalist, recently found upon his farm at Trenton, N. J., a box tortoise, upon the under shell of which was cut his grandfather's name, J. Abbott, with the date 1821. The appearance of the tortoise denoted great age, and there is no reason to doubt the fact that the name was really engraved upon it sixty-four years ago.

Pluck vs. Luck.

In an address delivered before the students of the Spencerian business college, Washington, D. C., June 29, 1869, among other things, Gen. James A. Garfield said:

"Now, young gentlemen, let me address you touching your success in life; and I hope the very brevity of my remarks will increase the chance of their making a lodgment in your minds. Let me beg you in the outset of your career, to dismiss from your minds all ideas of succeeding by luck. There is no more silly thought among young people than the foolish one that by-and-by something will turn up by which they will suddenly achieve fame or fortune. No, young gentlemen, things don't turn up in this world, unless somebody turns them up. Inertia is one of the indispensable laws of matter, and things lie that where they are until by some intelligent spirit (for nothing but spirit makes motion in this world) they are endowed with activity and life. Do not dream that some good luck is going to happen to you and give you a fortune. Luck is an ignis fatuus—you may follow it to ruin, but not to success. The great Napoleon, who believed in his destiny, followed it until he saw his star go down in blackest night, when the Old Guard perished around him, and Waterloo was lost. A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck.

Young men talk of trusting to the spur of the occasion. That trust is vain. Occasions cannot make spurs, young gentlemen. If you expect to wear spurs you must win them. If you wish to use them you must buckle them to your own heels before you go into the fight. The prize you may achieve is not worth the having unless you fight for it. Whatever you win in life you must conquer by your own efforts, and then it is yours—a part of yourself."

Hobbies of the Hygienists.

There were several dozen of the hygienists in council, each with his individual hobby. Each thought all the others were wrong. Each was sure that his own hobby was the only correct one. A gentleman present said he had taken Brown's Iron Bitters for debility and dyspepsia, and, though he didn't want to make a fuss about it, he knew the use of this great tonic to be better than all the notions he had heard advanced in the council. One practical cure is worth thousands of guesses and notions. Thousands of happy convalescents speak greatfully of Brown's Iron Bitters.

The colored women of Mobile have organized an art association.

George Reed, of West Earl township Lancaster Co. Pa., testifies to the cure of a poor widow named Nancy Sharp, living in his neighborhood. She was a great sufferer from rheumatism, unable to work and in destitute circumstances. Mr. Reed hearing of the case procured a bottle of Mishler's Herb Bitters, and the woman was speedily restored. She is now able to work, and is entirely well.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

BIRD AND FARM.

Even Blackbirds and Crows of Some Benefit to Agriculturists.

The aim of this article is to point out the good and bad qualities of our common birds and see whether they do more harm than good; to discover these we must consider their food. It is an interesting fact that our very injurious insects come periodically, and when they do appear all the birds leave their usual food and feast mainly of fruit and grain and attack harmless and injurious insects alike. When vast swarms of grasshoppers are leaving devastation in their wake, the birds feast on them and fall upon them as fast as the storm of insects [illegible] passed the birds return to their usual food, which the farmer has but little to spare. The thought may suggest itself that the birds by eating the fruit and grain of the farmer, after he has suffered from the grasshoppers, do more harm than they did good before. This, however, is not the case. Let us glance at the following figures, and then perhaps we will change our minds. An ordinary grasshopper weighs about a third of an ounce, and in the course of twenty-four hours eats and digests about five times its weight, or half an ounce.

For example, we will take the robin: when the country is overrun with grasshoppers he eats about sixty during the day, or six ounces. Now if these grasshoppers had lived they would have devoured thirty ounces of the farmer's grain in twenty-four hours. When the robin is once with the grasshoppers he eats nothing else, and when he returns to his regular diet he eats about four ounces of the farmer's grain in a day, the remaining two being made up of harmless and injurious insects.

We have now arrived at the questions to be considered:

1. Are birds generally useful or beneficial?
2. What birds are useful or injurious?
3. Can those birds be exterminated without injuring the farmer's interest?

After the food of the various birds are found into we shall be prepared to answer these questions. In investigating the food it is to be understood that everything is in natural condition; that is, no unusual abundance of grasshoppers or similar pests.

The robin lives on insects from February until May, south of the Ohio, and in higher latitudes his insect diet extends from about the 15th of March to May. During the remainder of his stay with us we find him changing his diet for fruit, and in the height of the season we find him living almost entirely on it. A short time two-thirds of his entire food, while the remaining third is formed of insects, ten species of which are harmful. The fruits he prefers are cherries and most all raspberries, strawberries, blackberries, currants and grapes.

The cat bird eats many insects and large quantities of cherries, but his food does not differ from the robin's.

We find many good qualities in the [illegible] other birds. They eat large quantities of fruit, but the score of harm is more than balanced by the large score of good it does in destroying great numbers of harmful insects.

The chimney swift passes as one [illegible] the fruit it eats is nearly or quite neutralized and its destroying numbers of great numbers of harmless and beneficial insects as well as injurious ones, such as spiders, [illegible] and flies.

The house or [illegible] is a good [illegible] farmer [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Jas. Hause has a couple of the finest porkers we have seen for many a day.

Mrs. Chas. Brooks' residence puts on its best appearance after a visit of several days by Clinton's painters,—the Gillen Bros.

Richmond, Gadd & Hogan shipped hogs and sheep to Buffalo last Saturday, and informed us that they did not get wealthy out of the experiment on pork.

Our coal dealers and consumers keep Andrew rather busy during his odd hours.

John T. Clark's large potato patch has presented a lively appearance of late, and made a protector again t the mischief perpetrated by the kids. They have all been busy.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. Matthews, who has been quite ill, is rapidly improving.

Chas. Waldron, V. S., has been doing considerable commendable work in these parts of late, having been called frequently to administer to valuable stock, both in Clinton and dgewater which have hastily ied under his management.

The pile of boxes in front of John Smith & Son's store would seem to say, "we have piles of new goods and are anxious to show what we can offer even in these dull times."

The old Chandler house has received a new coat of paint and looks almost like a new building.

E. R. Smith visited Detroit on business last Tuesday.

Ed. Clark has been spending several days with his Clinton friends.

Notices have been issued to notify the owners of poor sidewalks that pedestrians must be protected by immediate repairs.

Considerable complaint is heard of the potatoes rotting even after being stored in the cellar.

There is to be a meeting of the blue ribbon club again next Sunday. A good program will be presented.

The new tramway at the depot brought a smile to the agent as he gazed on the pile of good kindling in the old one.

The M. E. social will be held next Wednesday evening at Mrs. Abraham Glymp's. All are invited.

Alonzo Clark is with relatives in the city of Chicago.

The evening schools at the high school building are progressing finely.

The band boys are improving their spare time on some new music, and we may expect something fine in the near future.

The woolen mills are running right up to time and the new machinery introduced works well.

D. C. LeBaron, of Toledo, was in town last Monday.

C. Fisk's new house is nearing completion, and when finished will add much to that part of town.

Mr. Ward's house near the factory is undergoing repairs.

Ed. Seamark's new brick is moving upwards slowly but surely.

David Woodward of Clinton, received a message this morning announcing the death of his mother's sister, Mrs. Westfall, at Bellville, Wayne Co., and left this morning for that place.

Wm. C. Rogers took a trip to Monroe overland Monday. He reports the pasturage and wheat very backward down there.

Will Patterson and family were in Clinton over Sunday, the guests of Geo. H. Miles and wife. Mrs. P. spent several days here.

Rev. Barnes of the Congregational parsonage rejoices in the possession of not only a new cook room but a new wood shed also.

John Mason, of Adrian, district manager of the Michigan Bell Telephone, was in town Tuesday on business connected with the telephone office.

Mrs. Dudley and child, who have been visiting at E. W. Freese's, have returned home.

Geo. B. Williams, of Clinton, is now running a loom in the factory. He likes the business and makes an excellent hand.

E. Coffin has got fairly established in his "little shop around the corner" and with two knitting machines is working up the yarn quite lively.

"Christopher, where art thou," has his repairs nearly completed on his newly purchased property, and will soon move from the old into the new.

Progressive euchre has at last struck Clinton and rages with all the violence of Montreal small pox. The progressive nature of the malady renders it hard to check and the inhabitants stubbornly resist vaccination, in spite of Dave Woodward, Peter Kishpaugh, Elder Wastell, and other evangelists. Let Clinton alone; she is joined to her euchre.—Adrian Record.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Henry Sutherland died very suddenly Saturday morning of heart disease, caused by taking cold while convalescent from scarlet fever. Funeral services were held at the house Sunday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Wright officiating.

Last Sunday Lon West and Eugene Bowerman, a couple of lads about sixteen and seventeen years old, were out hunting and on their return home got a little too cunning, and drew up their guns to have a duel, and by some hook or crook Lon's gun went off and filled young Bowerman full of fine shot, from the crown of the head to his feet. The only thing that saved him was the ten rods distance that lay between them. Well, they say that bought ten wit is the best kind.

Miss Fida Ash was married last Wednesday, and we understand they expect to go up among the tall timber to make a home, as her husband has a farm in the north part of the state. Next.

W. H. Brainard and wife visited friends at Monroe last week.

We understand that we are to have three new saw mills in the place of the one that lately burned. Let the good work go on.

Married, Oct. 6th, 1885, at the residence of the bride's mother, in Raisin, Mr. Ira T. Allen of Hanover, Mich.; to Miss Celia D. Satterthwaite, Rev. H. D. Allen officiating. The happy couple departed by L. S. R. R., at 4 o'clock for Detroit and northern Michigan. Sorry to say we were not there to throw our old shoe after them, but trust that good luck will follow them through life as much as though we had been there and helped devour the chicken pies and things.

Benjamin Kelley was born in Sidney, Kennebec county, in the prohibition state of Maine—don't drink—his father's name was Libni, mother's Deborah—came to Michigan with the old folks in 1836—13 years old—dug potatoes, hoed corn, pulled weeds and did what father said for eight years in the summer—went to district school in the winter—fat boy, and full of mischief, but studious enough—worked the "old place" seven years "on shares"—then bought farm of his own in Raisin—lives on it yet—but has plenty of other land—didn't farm all his life, either—partner of T. J. Tobey's in cattle shipping business—does some of it yet—grew rich—most Quakers do—served as commissioner of highways for nearly twenty years—would be serving yet if he'd stand it—married pretty girl, Miss Jane Melinda Hoxsie—raised four adopted children—all hearty, happy and promising—Ben Kelley has gray hair, a jolly, honest face, a clean conscience, short stature and a long head—find him around Holloway when you want to see him. —Adrian Times.

BROOKLYN BILLET.

The weather for the past week has been very changeful. Snow and rain have fallen alternately, with now and then a day of sunshine. When shall we have our Indian summer?

A drunken row on the streets last Saturday evening caused a small commotion for a while, but the village Marshal succeeded in capturing one man and placing him in the lockup, where he found shelter for the Sabbath. On Monday morning he was brought before the justice and let go with the payment of a small fine.

Frank Whitney has been quite ill for a few days.

E. B. Culver returned from Chicago last Friday, where he had been spending a few days with his sister, Mrs. Austin.

The Hurtt Family are billed for the rink Saturday evening. This time they will positively appear (should nothing again happen to prevent.)

Miss Carrie Wright gave a party at her home last evening to about fifty invited guests.

Miss Eda Miller gave a party at the rink Thursday evening, in honor of her birthday. There were about forty skaters present and all seemed to enjoy themselves immensely. She received a beautiful ring set with turquoise and pearls, from her schoolmates: besides other presents from friends.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

The pleasant weather following the two weeks of clouds and rain is enjoyed by all. Boys again pound the ball and girls take long walks.

The greater number of students expect to spend quarterly meeting Sabbath at home.

Letters received by Prof. White from J. H. Douglas were read before the students at Chapel exercises one day last week. Mr. Douglas is enjoying himself; has been taking some foot tours and has at last settled down to hard study in the German language at Berlin University.

Mr. and Mrs. Harris, of Columbus, Ohio, have been visiting their daughter Anna at the Seminary during the past week.

We understand Clement S. Dester, of '79, has advanced to the position of "old gravity" at Kalamazoo College, and expects to be the possessor of a sheep skin, conferred by said college, some time next spring.

The neighborhood literary society met at the Seminary last Saturday evening, and after passing two hours quite pleasantly adjourned to meet again in two weeks at the same place. Subject for discussion at next meeting, "Lowell, and his works." Let there be a good attendance and a live meeting.

Dr. Albert Smith made us a pleasant call one day last week. Come again, you are always welcome.

Dr. Erastus Test, late Principal of the Seminary, has the chair of natural sciences and modern languages in a successful normal school at Richmond, Ind.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Miss Imogene Holmes, of Wales, Erie county, New York, is visiting her old friend and schoolmate, Mrs. E. A. Moyer, of Woodstock.

Messrs. John Webster and Henry Everett, of Lansing, spent a few days, with their families last week, visiting at Mr. G. T. Fisk's place in Somerset, and favored the Courier with a friendly call before returning home. Mr. Webster and his sister Mrs. Everett, were brought up in Hillsdale county, and were greeted by a host of friends during their brief sojourn at the old place.

It was "nip and tuck" with the fats and leans at the rink Saturday evening to decide which class should carry off the prize of 100 cigars offered the victors by Mr. Crandall. A large audience was present and intense excitement prevailed for a time as the contest was a very close one. Ed. Bullen won the race however, by about ten feet, thus settling the question of speed, and affording the gentleman an opportunity to exhibit his generosity by a free distribution of the plunder obtained.

While Mr. John Webster, of Lansing, was indulging in a little squirrel hunt over in Somerset the other day, he was surprised to find his nasal apparatus punctured in a manner somewhat abrupt by the gun, which he had supposed, done its surgical work at the other end. Moral; Never fool with a country gun.

Uncle Charles VanTine returned home from Isabella county last week.

Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Swartout, were in attendance at the wedding anniversary of Stephen Carey and wife, of Kelley's Corners, Monday evening. It is thirty years since Mr. and Mrs. C. were yoked together, and the event was celebrated by nearly one hundred guests.

A new furniture store to be located in the new part of the Swartout block, will soon add to the business facilities of the place. Mr. Harvey S. Eaton will be at the helm and proposes to open up a stock of goods which will draw custom. We understand that an undertaking department will also be kept in connection.

Considerable sorghum has been hauled through town this week en route for Root's sugar manufactory north of Hudson. Could it not be made profitable to start a similar concern near home?

Mrs. L. Frensdorf, reported by telephone as dying on Thursday of last week, is better. A protracted sinking spell gave rise to the report.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Fine fall weather as one could ask for.

We are glad to see Uncle Augustus Montgomery able to be out again.

Mrs. Sue Cone, of Hudson, is visiting relatives and friends in the village and vicinity this week.

T. H. Temple is the man who wants your wheat and will pay the highest market price.

Mrs. Harry Smith who went to Ann Arbor last week Monday for treatment returned Thursday. The doctors say there is no help for her. Mr. Smith and family have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad affliction.

Samuel Rappleye is improving his fine home on North Church street by building an addition, &c.

Richard Cadmus returned from a few weeks' visit with friends up north last week, and looks as though it agreed with him.

The attendance at the missionary meeting held at Mrs. Sue Clarke's pleasant home last week Wednesday afternoon was very large, and all report a very fine time.

G. W. Jackson, of Hillsdale, made friends here a flying call, arriving on Saturday and returning on Monday. He hasn't forgot how to crack a joke or laugh when he feels good, and says he is well pleased in his new home.

Mrs. Hattie Miller, of Constantine, is home on a visit.

The chorister, W. H. Arner, desires all members of the choir to be present Saturday evening, as they wish to talk up the changing of anthem books.

Next week Friday evening the Literary society will meet at the hall to elect officers for the ensuing term. A general attendance is desired.

Don't forget the grab bag at the social held at Mrs. P. W. Cadmus this week Friday evening. Let everybody turn out and make Minnie feel good. It is only ten cents for a grab.

C. A. Sharp shook hands with friends, and smiled behind the mail, Monday, reminding us of days gone by.

Prof. Earl Dresser, of Litchfield, was the guest of Miss Hattie Moon Friday and Saturday.

Mrs. Amanda Petis, of Wisconsin, and Mrs. Curry, of Ohio, sisters of Mrs. Emeline Smith, have been making her a visit for the past week.

J. F. Temple is building a fine barn on his prairie farm. It is 36x56 with 20 feet posts.

DEVILS LAKE DOINGS.

J. B. Allen is putting two billiard tables in his hotel, the Devil's Lake House, and making his arrangements to keep open house during the winter. An application has been forwarded to Washington for the establishment of a post office at the hotel and favorable news is expected from headquarters every day.

Hope Welch has got a supply of tickets from the M. & O. Railroad, and can now supply travelers with tickets to any point on the road.

The acre of land north of the railroad near Allen's Hotel, on which the grain elevator will be erected cost $262.50. Mrs. Sarah Sanford is that much richer than before.

BRITTON BUDGET.

The weather is not very favorable to farmers.

Corn husking has commenced and some soft corn is reported.

The farmers in the eastern part of this county are complaining severely of potato rot.

"When Greek meets Greek, then comes the tug of war." It was proven here when the rival wheat buyers both wanted John Zeluff's load of wheat. Half a cent at a jump per bushel was the ruling fluctuation.

Babcock & Parker report a growing trade, and all our merchants claim business to be looking better.

Wheat and hay have been coming in rapidly this week, and Britton is getting the name of a good market. Prices are better than in surrounding places.

Dr. Hallock has dug his potatoes. He says he found no rot, and in some places no potatoes.

Dr. Stevenson, of Adrian, made Dr. Hallock a short visit last week.

Some time ago Sydney Winney left here and no word has been heard from him. His friends would be glad to hear any news of him. His brother is now trying to trace him up. There is strong suspicion of foul play.

Sammy McGraw, a brakeman on the M. & O. got his hand pinched while coupling cars here. Dr. Hallock dressed it and sent him on his way rejoicing.

TIPTON TOPICS.

The last specimen of weather that Old Probabilities sends along reminds one of the potatoes in New York, altogether to soft for practical purposes.

We extend to Mr. and Mrs. Hollenbeck our heartiest congratulations, with the wish that they may spend many happy years together.

Rev. E. B. Sutton delivered a temperance sermon to a large and appreciative audience at the M. E. church on Sunday last.

Mr. A. Crane and wife are on a short visit to Hillsdale county.

Rev. A. A. Wall has resigned his work in this place, and accepted a call to Ashley. He and his family will remove to their new home soon.

The funeral services of William H. Elson were held at the house Wednesday, Oct. 10. He leaves a wife and several children to whom we extend our sincere sympathy.

There will be a musical entertainment at the Congregational church, Friday evening. Ice cream and cake will be served in the upper room. A fine time is anticipated.

THE HARNESS-MAKER'S WOOING.

"I never wooed," said Miss May,
And won't to-day, I'm sure of that,
But I'm as charmed as any lady
Who has been courted, I'm a bet.

She pressed the spring of her purse and at once
Came to the harness-maker.
"Mother sent me to see if you'd come
To bring a heart—today."

The clerk, not to be outdone, gave a bow
As he bade her sit down and wait
While he fitted a heart with a buckle and bow
Quite worthy of a queen.

"Now, if you'd like to see how we wed,
Why, I'm ready to show you the way
To make up the harness of matrimony
With a heart in the day."

"No," laughed Miss May, as she rose,
As easy as a bird in a tree,
"I'm sure I'd like it very much indeed,
But I'd rather be married in May."

"I'll come to-morrow, then," he cried,
Lost sadly to her parting grace,
"And if it rains, the matter's settled,
We'll be married in May."

THE BREAD WE EAT.

Some Points Relating to Its Wholesale Manufacture.

Interesting Secrets of the World's Cooking Rooms—Description of Bread Baking—How Crackers are Evolved, Etc.

A reporter made a very thorough tour of an extensive and well-known Minneapolis bakery and cracker factory. The bakers are all men. "The fact is," explained one of the firm, "that the trade is a hard one, requiring not only skill, judgment, and activity, but a far greater physical strength than women usually possess. I think housewives, as a rule, regard breadmaking as about the hardest kind of work they have to do. The making of bread in large quantities would prove far more taxing on the strength."

"How about pies and cakes?"

"Oh, they might do that. However, there is not the same inducement for them to learn a small part of a trade like that. At any rate, I know of very few women bakers."

An inspection of the actual process of bread-making, from the setting of the sponge to the time it goes into the oven under the sidewalk, convinced the visitor that the occupation is one which demands a great amount of muscle and the eminent ability to "hustle" as well. A trough full of dough, under the influence of "a little leaven" shows no more inclination to wait for a man's convenience than do time, tide or the tailor. The sponge for bread or rolls is made in one end of a stationary wooden trough, about three feet wide by the same depth, and from fifteen to twenty feet long. Likely as not, another sponge is setting in the other end, and the space between is conveniently dammed with flour. Either the compressed yeast (bought in five-pound packages) or a liquid yeast made by the firm is used as leaven. Sometimes the two are combined. There is very little machine work about breadmaking. After it has "proved," or risen, two able-bodied men go to the bottom, and hack up the lower stratum to the surface, and vigorously agitate the mass for fifteen or twenty minutes. Because of the depth of the trough and the mass of dough, usually sufficient for two or three hundred loaves, and the despatch with which the work must be done to get it out of the way before another batch comes on, the process does not appear in the light of a recreation exactly. The reporter thought he knew of nothing but base ball that would demand so much concentrated strength combined with activity. The bread is left in the trough to rise after this kneading. It lies there perhaps an hour and a half, and is then fished out upon a floured table and tackled by four men. The first cuts off a lump of dough about as large as his two hands. The second lays it on a pair of scales and pinches off a bit or adds a morsel, so as to make the "pound nonmatted on the head." A single addition or subtraction makes it right five times in six, and the operation does not take two seconds. A man stands on each side of the table, beyond him, and, seizing a pound of dough in each hand, rolls them round with quick, deft motions. Then the balls are placed regularly upon the farther end of the table, where they stand fifteen or twenty minutes before they are worked out in the oblong, pointed shape in which most loaves, especially Vienna and Eureka bread, appear. The loaves, having now attained their final form, are placed in tins and encouraged to rise by a coating of egg and sugar, which excludes the air and imprisons the gas. Then they are placed on a long-handled wooden shovel and slid into an oven which has an area of probably four hundred feet, and a temperature far above that to be attained in the ordinary range oven.

The reporter had always heard and implicitly trusted the tradition that the [illegible] of women are less successful [illegible] are) than men in [illegible] that "Is there any secret about your Eureka and Vienna bread that you can't give out?"

"None at all. The Vienna bread is moved with sweet milk instead of water, and that is all the difference. The Eureka bread has a pound of lard and a pound and a quarter of sugar to every [illegible] pounds of flour, and that and the facilities we have for a high even temperature in baking make all the difference there is. We use a pound of compressed yeast to [illegible] of flour in setting the sponge. A great deal, of course, depends on the yeast. If that is not first class, you may as well throw up the sponge at once."

"In making rolls, there are [illegible] as many kinds as there are loaves, as I said. The rolls are [illegible] but are [illegible]. A fast baker can do [illegible] hand, and [illegible] a [illegible] and roll [illegible] the other. [illegible] the same time. One [illegible] bread we bake in pails for two and one-half hours. It has some graham, and rye flour in it. Rye bread [illegible] with a little spice—no yeast. The Vienna and rye loaves are raised in cloths, without pans, and are baked right on the bottom of the oven.

"A visit to the cake, pie and turnover department was not less interesting. These articles are all made by hand except that the eggs are beaten by a machine. Out of one dough mixture as a foundation, half a dozen different sorts of cake may be made by the addition of some slight ingredient. But the science comes in knowing what kind of an oven, as women say, to use for each variety. The decorative material is ordinary frosting made out of pulverized white sugar and eggs, with enough acid, lemon, or cream of tartar to cut the grain off the sugar. The frosting is put into a cloth or rubber bag and squeezed out through a tube, just as the paints with which plaques and mottoes are colored. There is an endless variety of tubes through which stars and garlands and different styles of posies and foliage are squeezed. The finer work, however, such as the tracing of vines, birds, and other elaborate patterns, is done with a minute tracing tube, and gives room for real freehand drawing rather than mechanical execution. The more elaborate solid pieces, such as wedding bells, horseshoes, cooing doves, and palpitating hearts, which surmount the most pretentious table architecture, are made of gum paste, and are not edible, so the foreman of the cake department said. They are imported from Italy along with organ-grinding and macaroni.

"What is the work of an apprentice at the baker's art?"

"Well, he begins by sweeping up the floor, washing dishes, and doing odd jobs of any sort. Then he dusts the turnovers with powdered sugar, or beats the eggs, or paints over the loaves before they go into the oven—anything for which he is needed. If he is apt and industrious he ought to know his business pretty well in three or four years, but it is a trade in which there is always something new to be learned, and there is a wonderful facility to be gained in practice."

The cracker factory, which is an immense business in itself, was yet to be inspected. While the bread, cakes and pies go to feed hungry Minneapolitans only, the crackers are largely shipped to supply outside demands.

The process of cracker making was found to be more mechanical and less technical than bread, pie or cake making. Water is what is used exclusively. Crackers made from spring-sown wheat are tough and sprangy. The cracker sponge is set over night in an immense trough, and is worked the next morning through a patent screw mixer. The dough comes out in round columns about a foot through, and is dumped back two or three times until it is well kneaded. Then it is sent down through a chute in the floor to the platform, from which it is fed in sections to three rollers, one after another. The piece is passed under each one several times, and the rollers are so graded that the dough gradually thins and lengthens out as it proceeds. It finally passes into what is called the "form," which determines the width of the strip of dough. This strip is then started upon a canvas revolving belt, over which is a large revolving brush, which constantly dusts flour upon it. Two or three feet further on the dough comes under the stamp, operated also by machinery, and the crackers are given any one of the dozens of shapes known to the trade and families. If it is the usual square soda cracker, there will be five in a row, and the strip, of course, is endless as long as the dough holds out. As they emerge from under the stamp a boy stands ready with a sort of very thin wooden shovel, without raised edges, and with a handle several feet long, and with this instrument called a "peel," he takes off a section about three feet long, which he dexterously flirts with a twist of the wrist into the oven, or rather upon one of the immense revolving iron shelves which are contained in the oven. These shelves are about three feet wide and fifteen feet long, and one revolution serves to bake the crackers a delicate brown. As they come up done, another boy stands with a rake and hauls them unceremoniously into larger baskets, in which they are transferred by elevator to the third floor for packing. When only partially cooled they are put away by girls into barrels and boxes neatly lined with white paper, and are left uncovered until cooled and [illegible] While still warm they have a [illegible] as it possible to [illegible] break

Hence the expectation that these practical scientific bakers would stick close by their weights and measures and thermometers—which expectation was very far from the facts.

"Oh, no," said the head bread baker, "in mixing we just keep adding flour and water until the dough is of the [illegible] you know. Then, as

In getting a perfect edge on the outside rows of crackers a strip about three-quarters of an inch wide is incidentally sacrificed on each side, and this thrown back into the general mass of dough, is supposed to greatly improve it. The batch must consequently improve from first to last, as the amount of scraps keeps climbing up toward a majority. Cracker dust is another branch of the manufacture. ABBE LISZT.

An Hour With the Great "Meister" and His Pupils.

Liszt is a man of the world in the highest degree, a gallant host, a convivial guest, but he adds to these qualities others of a far more solid kind. When his life one day comes to be written, it will be recorded that no more self-denying and more kind-hearted man ever existed. Many a promising pupil would, but for his material assistance, have been unable to persevere in her career. During early years he experienced the greatest difficulties in his art, and taught, no doubt, profoundly in consequence of his knowing what it is to be poor. The great representative of the dazzling years of Liszt's life, long down to poverty through the misfortune of others, whom he has generously aided, has contributed of music as a science, to be a living testimony to his greatness. There may be a little pardonable self-laudation in this but there is no doubt that to have been a pupil of Liszt is a passport to most of the concert halls of the world. It must be remembered that "musical excellence" is the only introduction required to the charmed circle of which he is the center, but it must be excellence such as to augur greatness in the future. Not one farthing of pecuniary remuneration does he ever accept from any pupil.

Between two and four o'clock in the afternoon of about three days in the week musical reunions are held in the Meister's salon. There are then gathered together about twenty pupils around his grand piano. pupils is perhaps hardly the name suited to the persons here collected. It might be said that there were assembled a number of admirers looking to their chief for words of approbation, encouragement, and advice, but yet pupils they call themselves. A pupil is invited to play. Liszt's modus operandi is to allow them to choose their own pieces. The young lady singled out seats herself, the Meister paces the room and beats time with his fingers, all the eyes of the remaining nineteen enthusiasts are fixed upon his face; a nod of approval means smiles looks from the nineteen; at remarks such as: "Go on, go on," "That is your way," "Tastes differ," the nineteen faces light up with glee and flash exultation, for this means failure on this occasion, and the sole endeavor of those rival artists is to narrow the circle of the Meister's admirers and favorites. It is, however, the highest reward if the player be constantly interrupted, and if the Meister himself takes his seat at the piano, and replays the few bars. This is recognition, indeed. It is a bad sign if the piece is allowed to be finished without comment; the more frequent the interruptions, the greater as a rule the performer's perfection in the art—except, of course, in the case of a really famous performer. For Liszt, though sympathetic, is sparing of his interest until a first-rate standard has been reached.

That green-eyed monster, jealousy, plays nowhere in the world a greater role than in Weimar generally, and in the Meister's salon in particular. Petty intrigues to gain the great man's favor or to bring a rival into disfavor are unceasingly going on. To possess one of the hairs from the Meister's venerable head, to kiss his hand, and, in the case of a lady, to be chastely kissed upon the brow in return, constitutes the sole bliss of the hard-worked worshiper of Listz. Weimar echoes not with the din of arsenals and workshops, but with the clanging and banging of some scores of pianos, each endeavoring to out-Herod Herod, and to forge weapons to assert the superiority of Liszt in the musical world. While his pupils are interchanging glances and looking askance, the great man sometimes—not infrequently—retires to his buffet and refreshes himself with glad red wine. By four o'clock the seance is over, and now woe to the poor Meister, and woe to the happy possessor should he present a flower to any young lady as a mark of special favor. Those who know him more intimately will then successively upbraid him, and will, until they have received other and similar tokens of recognition, plot against the now luckless possessor. Those who stand more outside the charmed circle will beg morsels of the costly flower, and treasure them in their secretaries as souvenirs. It may, therefore, be readily conjectured that such marks of distinction are but seldom given.

The rest of the great Meister's waking hours are mostly given up to the composition of oratorios, one of which, "Die heilige Elizabeth," he conducted and introduced to the world at Marburg in 1885. Thus lives and thus works Liszt, the Alimeister of the tonic art; and so long as he lives the classic groves along the Ilm will not miss a worthy successor to the celebrities that have made the name of Weimar famous.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Two Curious Inscriptions.

Mr. Henry Jones communicates two specimens of inscriptions on houses. One is from an old stone let into a wall of Castle Caldwell, on Lough Erne. The stone is carved in the form of a violin, and thus inscribed:

"To the memory (sic) of Denis McCabe Fiddler who fell out of the St. Patrick's barge belonging to James Caldwell Bart. & Count of Milan and was drowned off this point August ye 14, 1770.

"Beware ye fiddlers of ye fiddler's fate
Nor tempt ye deep jest ye repent too late
You ever have been deemed ye water's foes
Then shun ye lake thi it with whisky flows
On firm land only exercise your skill
There ye may play and safely drink your fill."

PONDOLAND.

Description of a District Lying Due South of Natal.

Pondoland is a fertile district northeast of the Transkei, and lying due south of Natal. It is now under the protectorate of Cape Colony. The reasons for this new protectorate are obvious. In the first place, by establishing it, we have completed the half circle of British colony which now extends in unbroken succession between Cape Town and Natal, thus making us virtual protectors of the whole seaboard and ports between those two points. In the second place, we have kept out other nations—the Germans and the Dutch for instance—who have for some time cast a longing eye upon the fertile plains of Pondoland.

The present Chief Paramount—that is the style and title of the King of the Pondos—is Umquikela, a small but well-made man of about fifty years of age. He looks somewhat older, but this is probably on account of the shocks that he periodically gives to his constitution by drinking to excess. This monarch has lately issued a proclamation, which came into force in October of last year, by which he has decreed that all transport between the port of St. John's River and the interior should pay a prohibitory tax of £50 a wagon. This was doubtless in retaliation for the previous annexation of the port of St. John's River, in 1883, contrary to Umquikela's wishes, and in defiance of a treaty made in 1844 with his predecessor, Fakar. The effect of this proclamation has been to stop the importation of goods at St. John's River settlement, which extends for about twenty miles on the northeast bank of St. John's River. The Pondos are a rich nation so far as cattle is concerned, and their country allows them to grow mealies and corn and tobacco in profusion without much trouble and labor. Pondoland is very mountainous, and at the same time extremely well watered. The sea shore is covered with brush and forest. The principal trade of the country enters Pondoland across the River Untumvuna from Natal, or by way of Umtata from King William's Town through Tembuland, which lies immediately southeast. The exports of Pondoland are principally hides, horn and cattle. The traders of the country have been hitherto outlaws and other adventurous persons who have chosen to reside beyond British jurisdiction. In many cases they have exercised a wise discretion.

The Pondo men lead very lazy lives. They scarcely ever do any work. They leave to the women the cultivation of the mealie gardens and the hewing of wood and drawing of water. To the boys they leave the herding of the cattle. It is difficult to say what they do but lie, and thieve, and cheat, and in sufficiently formidable numbers (rendering resistance impossible) attack a store, carry off the goods of the unhappy storekeeper, and murder him if he protests too vehemently at the loss of his blankets and rum. They are an amiable race altogether. Pondoland contains plants of valuable medicinal properities, and the number of poisons in the country is very large. The Pondos does not scruple to make use of the latter whenever occasion requires an objectionable person to be quietly "removed." The grass, or veldt, of the country is, as a rule, too rich for sheep, but is admirably suited to cattle and horses, which are very numerous. There are very few Boers, if any, in the country, most of the traders being British or Griqua half-castes. Umquikela, who is half his time fuddled with drink, has lost his influence with the rest of the chiefs in the country. Tribal wars are frequent, and the power of the Paramount Chief is but very partially recognized, even in his own neighborhood. Justice is consequently perfectly out of the question, there being no one to administer it, and no one to execute it.—Cor. London Globe.

Skulls of Criminals.

The Anthropological Congress at Rome will have a curious feature in a collection of 700 skulls of criminals, numbered and classified. To these will be added the photographs of 3,000, and the brains of more than 150 convicts, thousands of autographs, poems, sketches, and special instruments, the work of criminals, an album containing a record of 700 observations, physical and moral, on 500 criminals and on 300 ordinary men. There will also be graphic maps of crime in Europe with reference to meteorology, food, institutions, suicide, etc.; tables of the stature of criminals in relation to the length of the arms, and of crime in towns compared to that in the country. M. Bertillon will exhibit the graphic curves of 23,000 recidivistes examined in twelve parts of the body and the practical results obtained. Photographs of Russian political and other criminals, especially of those from Moscow, and wax masks of a large number of celebrated criminals, will also be exhibited. All the nobilities in the science of criminal anthropology will take part in the Congress.—N. Y. Post.

Population of the Hawaiian Islands.

The population of the Sandwich Islands in 1884 was 80,578. The last census was taken in December, 1878, when the population was 57,985. It is a neat little craft and is well adapted to the purposes for which it is intended.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—That a layman can do effective Christian work on the frontier is shown by the record of a Congregational deacon in Wisconsin, who, in the last thirty years, has fathered the building of six meeting houses and organized several churches. He has a home missionary commission, and has covered territory uncared for by Protestant ministers.—Congregationalist.

—The colored people have three well organized colleges in Atlanta and are building a fourth. One thousand young negroes attended the three colleges during the last term. Besides there were 2,000 negro children in the public schools of the city. A high standard of scholarship has been established at the colleges, says the Atlanta Constitution, and the average proficiency of the students is fine.

—"The gold and scarlet of the sun" is rivalled in the cupolas of St. Peter's Cathedral, just finished at Moscow. There are five of the cupolas, and no less than 900 pounds of gold were used in overlaying them. The doors of the temple cost $310,000, and upon the marble floors were expended $1,500,000. Ten thousand worshipers can be comfortable, if their souls let them, within this $12,500,000 temple.

Rejoicing Down South.

LEXINGTON, KY.—Mr. John T. Bruce, of the United States Revenue Collector's Office, informed an editor of the Daily Press, of this city, that for seven years he suffered terribly from rheumatism in his ankle, which most of the time was swollen to two or three times its natural size, and was so painful that he could not put his foot to the ground. After trying everything he could think of without obtaining relief, he at ten o'clock one morning applied St. Jacobs Oil, and shortly afterwards made two further applications. At three o'clock that afternoon the pain was gone; the swelling also disappeared, and the cure was as permanent as it was quick.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 15, 1885

ONE DAY ON THE ROAD.

Last Saturday was set apart for a business visit to Adrian and Hudson, which had been delayed for several days. The day opened warm and clear, and we improved our time to the best advantage from our arrival in Adrian at nine o'clock A. M., until our return on the evening train.

The forenoon was busily spent in making various calls.

Prof. Evan's Business College is flourishing. He has a good complement of students now and he has new arrivals every week. The graduates from his institution never fail to secure good business positions.

M. Graves, the Secretary of the County Agricultural Society has a desk in Hill & Rich's office, where he can be found every Saturday to pay the premiums awarded at the last county fair. A short call at his rooms found him busy and feeling extra good natured over the success of the late county fair.

Wending our way up west Maumee and McKensie streets we found in due time the residence of Mr. Philo C. Mills, a former resident of Tecumseh. Mr. Mills has been confined to the house about a week with an attack of sciatic rheumatism, so he was not in a very amiable mood for visiting, but we enjoyed a few moments chat with him nevertheless. Mr. Mills has a very pleasant home located in a pleasant part of the city.

Here we met Mr. Leroy Mills and accepted an invitation from him to take a short drive. He took us around to the fine residence occupied by himself and Mr. Pomeroy's family, and thence down into the city. Mr. Mills is now giving his entire attention to the subscription book business. The firm, of which Mr. Mills is the managing partner, is Mills, Dodge & Pomeroy. They control several books, but are giving their principal attention to a work called Perfect Jewels, which is having a very extensive sale. It is a large book in one volume containing the choicest selections from American literature, in prose and verse, a few pieces of classical music, short biographies of prominent men, a department of quotations, etc. It is the most complete work of the kind that has ever fallen under our notice, and is destined to have a large circulation.

A call at the Record and Press offices came next on the program. We found Messrs. Beakes & Smith both on duty, hard at work on a six page edition for Saturday evening. The readers of the Record need not be told that every issue of the paper sparkles with humor and overflows with news. The Record is an established success and is growing in popular favor every day.

We found Bro. Stearns out; that is, we didn't find him in. He was engaged among the mail bags at the post office. Although Uncle Sam demands much of his time now, he has competent assistants in the printing office and the Press does not suffer any detriment by the change.

We inspected that gas engine. We expected to find it concealed in Bro. Smith's flask pocket, but were disappointed. It was securely nailed to a plank in the basement story of the Press building. As we saw the little beauty work the query suggested itself, whether the extra brilliancy of the Record columns during the past few weeks has any connection with that gas machine.

We made the Times a brief call also, and were equally fortunate there. Applegate & Fee were both out searching for news, but we found Geo. Larwill at his post and trespassed upon his time long enough to inspect the photograph of the Hannah Memorial badge which the Times had just received. Judging from the photographic representation the original will be an elegant piece of workmanship. The Times is prospering, as it always does.

Taking the noon train west we arrived in Hudson about one o'clock and repaired at once to the Hudson House, where an excellent dinner was soon disposed of. Mine host Lane is keeping a first-class house and evidently has a good run of custom.

The old corner store of J. K. Bojes & Co., was crowded with customers, but we finally worked our way to the cashier's desk and had a short chat with him.

Upton & Perkins have an elegant store well filled with goods. Their establishment is a credit to the town.

The Wide-Awake store is doing a rushing business and is evidently rightly named.

A call at Dr. M. M. Fessenden's dental office found him in. The Doctor is working into a good practice which will be gratifying news to his many Tecumseh acquaintances.

We paid our respects at the office of the Post, but found Bro. Scarritt out on business errands. The Post is thriving, as its well filled columns abundantly prove.

A call at the Gazette office found Bro. Schemerhorn on deck, wearing the same genial smile and cut-away coat which made him so attractive to the young ladies on the press excursion. Fin. Deuel was at the case. He likes his position there.

The Grand Rapids Furniture Co., have a large store packed with goods in the furniture line, and they are offering extra bargains to customers this fall.

Mr. Carter is rushing the carriage business. His new road cart is a beauty and its sale is extending into other towns and counties. Mr. Carter thinks he has a bonanza in this cart.

Henry C. Hall is still captain of the old Central grocery and tea house. He is engaged just at present in getting up a pumpkin show. He had some big pumpkins already on exhibition, but the list will not be closed until Saturday, Oct. 24th.

Taking the 3:30 train east, we were in Adrian at 4:30 and had a few hours for more calls.

We found our way to the dinning hall of the Central House about tea time. The Central is well kept now and has a good run of both transient customers and regular boarders. They set an excellent table and their rates are reasonable.

Fred Landgraf has his headquarters at Humphrey's book store, and is still selling sewing machines. Business has been rather easy this summer but he looks for a lively fall trade.

Crane & Wood's new double store is rapidly assuming shape. When the interior improvements are completed and the shelves filled with goods, they will have one of the finest stores and one of the largest stocks of clothing ever displayed in this section.

A. B. Park will move into an elegant new store on South Main street about the first of November, and then the other dry goods merchants of Adrian will have to look out.

Dondero has a larger stock than ever of hats and caps, furs and mittens. He is well pleased with the outlook for a good fall trade.

Adrian is putting on metropolitan airs, sure enough, but she wears her new honors with becoming dignity. The City Hall is now finished and occupied; the Court House is nearing completion, and will be an ornament to the city and county; they have a few street electric lamps, and several stores are provided with the same light; and they expect a street railway before many more moons have waned.

We arrived home on the late train, with the satisfaction of having enjoyed a pleasant day and a good business trip.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine

For November begins with the second installment of Miss Mathews's "Dilettanti Days," in which she takes the reader through Warwickshire and Oxford, and lands him in London. Seven illustrations accompany this installment, including a curious old portrait of Shakespeare on a bellows. The twentieth of the series of Christ's Parables is "The Friend at Midnight," and the twenty-first, "The Unjust Judge," both illustrated. Four more short biographies of the sacred Musicians appear—Ferdinand Ries, the two brothers Schneider, F. E. Fesca. "The Jews in Exile" are treated in the series of Bible History with five illustrations. A specially noteworthy contribution is "The Ministers on Wheels," by the Rev. G. S. Some of the illustrations are from photographs taken on the route. The subject of Dr. Talmage's sermon is "The Abolition of Sunday." It is one of his best. In this number are portraits of the late Sir Moses Montefiore (and his tomb.) Pierre de Beranger (and his monument, recently erected,) the Rev. R. A. Pierce, the first deaf-mute clergyman in the Church of England, and Archdeacon F. W. Farrar, now on a visit to this country. Alexander; and there are several fine poems, together with a large and varied assortment of long and short articles suited to almost every taste. Appearances are deceiving oftimes. Field, of the Tecumseh News, and Blosser, of the Manchester Enterprise, while in Adrian a few days ago, wore such excellent clothes that the Press was moved to say: "Call again, gentlemen; we like to mingle with millionaries." Which brings the truthful Field to remark that had the Press known that he wore a borrowed suit it would hardly have contained the item. All right. Now let Blosser speak out.—Adrian Record.

The New York EVENING POST offers its semi-weekly edition to new readers for the last three months of this year for 25 cents. Its make-up includes, besides the news of the half-week, the leading editorials of the daily edition, foreign and domestic correspondence, personal, political and religious notes, book reviews, musical and dramatic criticism, farm, household, and fashion hints, selections from the best current foreign literature, etc. Owing to its thoroughly independent attitude upon all political questions, the views of the Evening Post are more eagerly sought and more widely copied than those of almost any other newspaper in the country. This was the case in the last presidential campaign, when, for reasons which it gave in advance of the nomination, it found itself unable to support the Republican candidate. This has been the case also since the election, for the paper has again demonstrated its independence by promptly denouncing all departures of the new administration from the reform pledges upon which it was entrusted with power.

The following item appears in the Adrian Record of Thursday, Oct. 8th. "Consideration of the faults of others" was the theme of the Universalist minister at Tecumseh last Sabbath. That's right. It is the faults of others we hate. None of us have any of our own. Give it to'em, parson!

In the Battle Creek Moon of Friday, Oct. 9th, the same item appears, word for word. How true it is that great minds run in the same channel.

JOYOUS WEDDING BELLS.

Another of Tecumseh's fairest daughters has been won, and this time the lucky man is a promising young merchant of Detroit. On Thursday afternoon last the spacious mansion of Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Sutton, was thronged with a happy company to witness the marriage of Miss Minnie A. Sutton, to Mr. James S. Wilson, of Detroit. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. A. H. Lucas, of Greeley, Col., a former schoolmate of the bride, and was somewhat unique in character. It followed the French custom, being a civil and religious rite combined. At five o'clock the bride and groom were ushered into the parlor attended by Miss Louie Brown, of Toledo as bridesmaid, and Mr. Maddox, of Detroit, as best man. Mr. Ranney, of Detroit, and Mr. J. Newton Satterthwaite officiated as ushers. As the bridal pair entered the room, Miss Octa E. Wise, of Adrian, executed upon the piano the wedding march from Lohengrin, which was very finely rendered. The bride was attired in a dress of white satin with pearl trimming, with a front of valenciennes lace, the costume being completed with vail and orange blossoms. Miss Brown was dressed in sea foam silk, trimmed with pearl and oriental lace. The groom and groomsman were attired in a full dress suit of plain black.

In addition to the large number of Tecumseh and Raisin friends in attendance, the following guests were present from abroad: Miss Anna H. Sutton, of New York City; Mr. and Mrs. John G. Sutton, of Richmond, Ind.; Mrs. Tuttle, of Decatur, Mich.; Mr. John Wilson and Miss Maggie Wilson, brother and sister of the groom; Mr. Gage, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Stoepel, of Detroit; Mrs. Jennie Hicks, of Osceola; Judge and Mrs. Geddes, F. R. Stebbins and family, F. G. Stebbins, wife and son, Mr. and Mrs. Mumford, Mr. and Mrs. Illinden, Misses Lillie and Hattie Patterson, of Adrian.

The bridal pair were handsomely remembered by both present and absent friends in a magnificent array of elegant and useful wedding gifts. Their aggregate value, at a modest estimate, must have reached the sum of $2,000, including a bank check for $1,000 presented by the bride's father.

The family of Mr. Wilson came from Glasgow, Scotland, and settled in Almont, Mich., when the groom was a boy of eight years old. For the past six years he has been in business at Detroit, four years with Edson & Moore, and for the past two years in J. K. Burnham & Co's., Wholesale Dry Goods House, where he is now employed.

It is needless to pass any encomiums upon the manner in which the festivities of the evening were conducted. The arrangements were complete in every detail, and the large company present were most elegantly and hospitably entertained. The groom, although nearly a stranger in Tecumseh, will be congratulated upon the wisdom shown in his choice of a help-mate. The bride will leave her old home, where she has passed the years of her childhood, and has so many warm hearted friends, accompanied by the good wishes of all and their sincere prayers for her temporal welfare and happiness.

The bridal couple departed on the evening train for Chicago. After a brief honeymoon in the Garden City, they will return to Detroit, where they will take up their permanent residence.

From a late number of the Kansas City Journal we clip the following, which indicates that our old friend Dr. H. D. Baker is having political honors thrust upon him.

FORT SCOTT, KAN., Oct. 3.—The Republican county convention met here to-day and nominated the following ticket: For treasurer, J. J. Stewart; county clerk, E. J. Chapin; register of deeds, L. G. Porter; sheriff, D. D. Dougherty; county surveyor, Jasper Fortney; coroner, Dr. H. D. Baker. The convention was characterized by perfect harmony.

KEEPING VEGETABLES IN WINTER.

A great many people would like to know how to keep vegetables through the winter so they will be fresh and crisp and wholesome for the table. A few simple hints at this season of the year may not be out of place here. All vegetables contain a large percentage of water and if this is dried out of them, no amount of cooking will make them tender. To keep this water in and at the same time to keep them from freezing is what is wanted. There are but very few cellars, especially under rooms heated by stoves, that are cool enough for cabbages. The best way I know of to keep cabbage is by taking barrels and sinking them in the open ground to within a foot or so of the top, bank up the earth around so as to keep the water out, cut off the heads and pack them in, top down; throw a piece of sacking over the top and cover this with coarse litter, leaves or other substance to keep out the frost. They can be taken out any time when wanted. Turnips, beets, parsnips, etc. can be kept in any cellar, by putting a layer of sand or sawdust between them in barrels or boxes. I have kept beets and turnips fresh until May, by putting them in dry sawdust, and the cellar was warmed in severe cold weather by a furnace. ABNER WILSON.

A WORD TO THE MEDICAL EDITOR.

Mr. Stacy has seen fit to take his Clinton correspondent under his wing again for protection, but they are both wrong as usual. We have yet to learn that Mr. Ed. VanDeMark ever had the refusal of the brick house referred to. At least he is not the person we have been informed by one of the employees of the HERALD office is the correspondent.

The above clipping is from the Clinton correspondence in last week's Tecumseh News. The medical editor says "we have yet to learn" etc. This admission does not surprise us, in the least. There are a great many things which the medical editor has yet to learn. Truthfulness seems to be one of them. When in Clinton a few days ago we were assured by two persons, one of whom was Mr. VanDeMark himself, that he did have the refusal of the brick house referred to.

The last clause of the clipping reveals the fact that the medical editor is still engaged in his fruitless search after the HERALD correspondent. He appears to have devoted his leisure hours during the spring and summer months to pumping the employees of the HERALD office. During the zero weather of last winter the medical editor delegated to his amiable wife the unpleasant duty of applying the pump handle process to the editor of the HERALD, but the lady found the pump frozen up, and she departed no wiser than when she came. With the approach of warm weather the medical editor deemed it best to take a new tack, and we are now informed that he has been devoting his talents and persuasiveness to a personal interview with some of the HERALD employees. We sincerely sympathize with the medical editor, and regret that we are compelled, in justice to ourselves, to prove the falsity of his assertion. We respectfully commend to the medical editor's serious consideration the card of the HERALD employees, printed below.

Julius Cæsar is authority for the statement that ancient Gaul was divided into three parts. The medical editor's gall is likewise divided into three parts. First: Having an unquenchable thirst to extract a business secret from another newspaper and not possessing sufficient courage to transact the impertinent errand himself, he delegates the task to his wife. Secondly. Having failed to quench his thirst in this effort, he continues his impertinence by surreptitiously interviewing the employees of this office. Thirdly: He publicly boasts of his own shame in print, and is so anxious to proclaim it that he publishes a falsehood to prove his impertinence.

We respectfully advise the medical editor to devote his literary talents hereafter to the Clinton end of his own publication. We feel quite competent to manage the HERALD business without any of his valuable assistance.

A CARD.

We, the undersigned, employees in the HERALD office, desire to state that we have never informed Dr. Burchard who the Clinton correspondent of the HERALD was, and that his statement to that effect, published in last week's News, has no foundation in fact.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

How They Are Made to Duplicate the Original.

There is a small room in the rear of a Court-street store in which works an old, gray-haired man. Surrounding him on all sides are legs of many shapes and sizes. Some are short and stout, with rather too much calf for strictly classical beauty, others are long and slim, with a deplorable lack of calf, while others vie in shapeliness with the nether limbs of a Greek slave or Venus de Milo.

The old man when visited recently was hard at work, but consented to give the writer a few particulars in regard to his business.

"Now, that," he said, pointing to a shapely leg hanging over the fire, "belongs to a Newburyport young lady."

"That," continued the old man, "is what's known as a knee bearing leg. I made it for her three years ago, when she was about fourteen years old. She lost her leg a little below the knee—so short she couldn't wear a socket bearing-leg, so she was obliged to have a kneer-bearing, to walk on the knee. She has grown a little since, and so I was obliged to lengthened it out. I cut the leg in two at the calf and put in a piece, dovetailing it and fastening it with glue. I've histed a child's leg least at four inches before it was given up, when its parents were poor and couldn't afford a new one."

"How did the young lady lose her leg?"

"I don't know; I didn't ask her. I never ask anybody, for some are very sensitive about it, especially men. You see a great many men lose their legs by being run over when they are drunk. I do not believe I've asked a man that question for ten years. Now here," picking up a leg in process of construction, "legs don't weigh as much as you'd think. Including all the ironwork, that leg wouldn't weigh more than five pounds. I have just made one for a full-grown woman that weighed, everything complete, including the upper socket, exactly three pounds. I made it particularly light on account of her being sickly. I want to show you now whether we get the durability. The steel ankle-joints are, you see, set in the wood, and slightly broader at the ankle than further up the leg, which makes them sorter dovetailed. The bearing-down strain is borne in part by them and partly by an endless and very powerful cord—some make it of silk, but I always use linen—extending from the heel of the foot over a bar in the calf of the leg, which is hollow. The cord relieves principally what is called 'the nosing,' where the shin plays into the foot.

"The ankle-joints are, you see, connected by a steel bolt, which makes the leg particularly strong about the ankle, where the most strain comes. The toe-joint is located at the same place as in the natural foot, and works with a spring that brings the toe into place after each step. The wood? I use willow altogether, and have never used any other. I have shown you one used where the leg has been lost below the knee.

"Now this," producing another leg, "is for one lost above the knee. It is the same in every particular as the other, with the addition of a wooden socket to secure the stump. It works at the knee in a very natural manner on a simple bolt, with a spring extending from the thin piece to the lower part of the top socket. This spring throws the foot forward, in walking, the minute the toe leaves the floor.

"You will observe that if the amputation is above the knee the leg must be held in place by suspenders made of a stout welt—part elastic and part non-elastic—extending over the shoulder. If with a long stump below the knee, the leather socket, laced above the knee, is usually sufficient.

"If, however, there is but a short stump below the knee a strap is required. Every weak point in a leg is specially guarded, in some way or other; and when the steel and woodwork is complete the leg is covered with calfskin similar to a drumhead. It is put on wet and dries to the leg, very closely, adding a great deal to its strength. Then that is sand-papered down to a surface, and the holes in the calf opened out. They are for ventilation, but I doubt if they do any good. I always put them in, because a good many are of the notion they are. Then the leg is painted. I use alcoholic paint, made of gum and dry lead. The minute it strikes water it is set and you can't wash it off with anything except alcohol.

"I'll show you a leg," producing a particularly lifelike one, the foot of which bore a shoe and stocking, "that has been painted seventeen years and is, you see, in pretty good condition."

"What do you consider your most singular case?"

"That of a little boy that lives near the old reservoir. He was brought to me in his father's arms when he was sixteen or seventeen months old, and had never walked a step. I didn't dare to touch him, he was so young and tender, and his father took him to Dr. Shaw. The doctor advised him to get a limb right off so as to prevent hip disease on the other side. That had never occurred to me. The doctor's opinion took all the responsibility away from me; and so I went to work at once, and made a leg for the boy. He learned to walk with it and walks and runs with it now so well that you'd hardly know he'd lost a leg. I have customers all over the country—one in Saginaw, Mich., and another in Leavenworth, Kan., and at least a dozen in Nova Scotia. In the Boston custom-house I have quite a number."

"How long will a leg wear?"

"It is a question often asked me, and a very hard one to answer. I have a customer that has worn a leg for twenty-one years, and I know men that would not wear a leg two years. It is just as it is with everything else. Some take care of them and others stave them out very quickly.

"The government, you know, allows soldiers a new leg every five years, or $75. That looks as if they thought five years was the average, but good legs will, in my opinion, average at least eight years. The price the government sets on 'em is about the lowest they can be made for, though some manufacturers ask twice as much as that.

"How long does it take to make a leg? Well, I'll tell you. In war times they said if a man made a leg in eight days they was satisfied."—Boston Globe.

NIHILISM NOT DEAD.

The News About Nihilists Has Simply Been Carefully Suppressed.

For the sake of his Czar and fatherland, Count Dmitry Andreevitch Tolstoi, the Minister of the Interior, undertook to perform a very clever feat, not smacking of wise statesmanship and genuine diplomacy. It is generally known that for many years past all the powers of Europe have looked upon nihilism as a smarting thorn in the Czar's heel. The home troubles, it was believed, would not allow the Russian autocrat to wield all his huge forces against any foreign enemy. This matter was actually annoying His Majesty's Government. Therefore Dmitry Andreevitch made up his mind that nihilism must be dead, or at least proclaimed to be so. Certainly the role of a trickster was not becoming to a man of three score and ten, a minister, a senator, a president of the Academy of Sciences, an actual privy counselor, a count, and a knight of all the imperial orders, but if in holy Russia it is blissful to be a "fool for Christ's sake," then why could not a high dignitary of Russia descend to the role of a trickster for the Czar's sake? Be it what it may, the illustrious Count dug himself a grave for Nihilism, performed a funeral service, and delivered an obituary oration over it, and all that in dead secret. His oration, however, he took pains to make known all over the world.

"Nihilism is dead," said the Czar's Minister, and it was flashed through the wires that encircle the globe. As all Governors of Russia are under the immediate command of the Minister of the Interior, and all the newspapers are under the unavoidable control of the same minister, it has for the last three years looked here indeed as if Nihilism had turned upon plain Nihil. Even abroad it was lately admitted that the Nihilists had degenerated and gone.

Suddenly news came here from the City of Kharkoff that Nihilism was yet alive. As the Minister of the Interior and the Governor of Kharkoff are now on the leave of absence, this inopportune discovery was not smothered in the very bud. These are the facts:

A few days ago, at midnight, in the city of Kharkoff, graced with a university, there was arrested in the street a man who proved to be armed like a regular terrorist. He had on his person a pistol, a dagger and some poison. In order to get all the glory to themselves, the gendarmes, without informing their superiors, tried to find the house in which the captured Nihilist resided. In a suburb they found a house in which one of the two boarders was missing, and they guessed that that was the place they needed. Though it was past nine in the morning, yet the other man was fast asleep. They awoke him and asked him to dress himself. Two gendarmes sat on the foot of the bed of their man, waiting for him. Suddenly he thrust his hand under his pillow, snatched a big pistol, and fired at one of the two gendarmes. He missed his aim and the two men grappled with him. Another shot was fired, and one of the two gendarmes, Fessenko, fell mortally wounded. A third gendarme rushed into the room and his wrist was pierced with a bullet. More men rushed in, and the Nihilist was overpowered and secured. His name, as it appeared from his pass, was Platon Lebedinsky. The wounded gendarme was taken to a hospital, but he died on the way. In a few minutes all the authorities of Kharkoff, Vice-Governor, Colonel of Gendarmes, the Provouce Attorney, and the Chief of the Police, with hundreds of policemen and gendarmes, were at the place of shooting. In broad daylight, before a crowd of people, they had discovered the Nihilist quarters in regular running order. There was a secret printing press, and piles of orders of the much-dreaded executive committee; dynamite, nitro-glycerine, and bombs ready for use; a little armory of pistols, daggers, and cartridges; different masks and wigs and dies, and other accessories of Nihilist quarters. There was an oven full of explosives, which no man in Kharkoff dared to approach, and so an expert on the Nihilist bombs was sent here from this city. The expert placed a bomb in a hollow tree and exploded it by means of the electric current. The simple-minded residents of Kharkoff thought that an earthquake shook them. Wooden splinters flew for half a mile.

When Dmitry Andreevitch Tolstoi heard of the Kharkoff incident he swooned, and, on coming to himself, he swore that all the Kharkoff authorities should be put in sacks and drowned in the Donetz River at midnight, along with their two captured Nihilists.

Now it transpires that during the last three years, which appeared so quiet, the number of the arrested Nihilists was as large as in the liveliest times of terrorism. But everything was done quietly. The victims, without any trial, were hidden beyond "nine iron doors," as a Russian fairy tale runs, and the tongues of the witnesses of their arrest were sealed under the penalty of Siberia.

No, Nihilism will not die till the people of Russia will long for annihilation of the monstrous system of autocracy.—Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Veritable Curiosity Shop.

Four miles west of Thomaston, Conn., on an unfrequented road, stands a house which shows evident signs of age. In front, beneath a shady maple, are two tombstones of persons who died in 1776 and 1778. A long, lank individual named Worrell lives a sort of hermit life in the house, which is reached by a long pair of stairs. The house within is a veritable curiosity shop, the wall being covered with huge hornet nests, wreaths made from potato bugs, all grasses of the field, besides innumerable butterflies and insects fastened to the walls with pins. A room in the rear is a museum in itself—cases of stuffed birds and snakes, frogs, owls, hawks, pigeons, minerals, a chair 120 years old, a wreath of snake skins, another potatoes, a third of eggs, a whisky bottle 160 years old, lizards of all species, a frame enclosing a wreath made of the claws of animals, 4,800 in all, and all sorts of odd things from the woods.—N. Y. Post.

A Primitive Tribe

Dr. Hunter describes a peculiar tribe in India which has preserved an extreme primitiveness. The people are called Leaf Wearers, because they wear the costume of Adam and Eve before the fall; or, more strictly speaking, they did so until the English persuaded them to adopt cloth.

In 1871 the English officer called together the clan, and after a speech handed out strips of cotton for the women to put on. They then passed in single file to the number of 1,900 before him, made obeisance to him, and were afterward marked on the forehead with vermilion as a sign of their entering into civilized society. Finally, they gathered the bundles of leaves which had formed their sole clothing into a great heap, and solemnly set fire to it. This leaf-wearing tribe had no knowledge of the metals till quite lately, when foreigners came among them, and no word existed in their native language for iron or any other metal. But their country abounds in flint weapons, so that the Juangs form a remnant to our own day of the stone age. "Their huts," writes the officer who knows them best, "are among the smallest that human beings ever deliberately constructed as dwellings. They measure about six feet by eight feet. The head of the family and all the females huddle together in this one shell, not much larger than a dog kennel." The boys and the young men of the village live in one large building apart by themselves; and this custom of having a common abode for the whole male youth of the hamlet is found among many aboriginal tribes in distant parts of India.

Can you spell? Well, yes; almost anybody can spell. Then spell this, and make out what it means. If you can't, then pass it on to your next neighbor;

It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

THE LOCO WEED.

A Trans-Missippi Plant which Works Great Havoc Among Cattle.

For the last twelve years, complaints have been made in trans-Mississippi regions, particularly from the plain and mountain region, of death to live stock from eating supposably poisonous plants. Investigation traced the cause to two genera, either to species of Astragalus—nearly allied to the lupine—and to Oxytropis plants, belong to the pea family—a family (Leguminosæ) not considered heretofore as containing virulent poisonous species, but which does contain many food and forage plants. Like the plant producing milk-sickness, stock do not seem to eat it naturally, but, once they begin, they continue persistently. These two genera of plants are found throughout the plains and mountain regions to and including California. Of Astragalus there are a great number of species. In California some of them grow with the habit and vigor of lucerne. It is also said to grow on high and low, wet and dry land. The species Oxytropis, poisonous to stock, is said to be partial to damp ground and is perennial, growing up each season from the root. The symptoms of the disease are temporary intoxication, passing to complete nervous and muscular wreck in the later stages, and, fully developed, death ensues from starvation from inability to digest food. During the pronounced stages of the disease the animal becomes stupid, wild, or vicious, sometimes acting as though possessed by blindstaggers. No antidote has yet been discovered, hence extermination of the plants is the only remedy. This may be considered well-nigh impossible over the great range of wild feeding grounds. In cultivated pastures, however, it may easily be managed. The common name of the Austragalus, is milk-vetch and a number of species are described by Gray as existing east of the Mississippi, none known to be injurious, the species injurious being found only west of the Mississippi, and only, it is believed, as we approach the plains regions.

Astragalus Mollissimus, one of the weeds to which the general name of locc weed is given, is a perennial herbaceous plant, of the region of the great plains from Colorado to New Mexico, Texas and Arkansas. There are usually a great many stalks proceeding from a large root stalk. They are reclining towards the base and erect above. The stalks are so short that the leaves and flower-stalks seem to proceed directly from the root. They are branching at the base and give rise to numerous leaves and long stems bearing the flowers and pods. The leaves are usually six to ten inches long, composed of nine to fifteen leaflets, borne on each side of the central leaf-stalk in pairs, except the upper one. They are of oval form, one-half to three-quarters of an inch long, of a shining silvery hue, from being clothed with soft, silky hairs. The flower-stalks are about as long, sometimes longer, than the stalk of leaflets, naked below, and at the upper part (one-fourth to one-half), bearing a rather thick spike of flowers, which are nearly an inch long, narrow, and somewhat cylindrical, the carolla (inner covering of the flower) of a velvet or purple color, the calyx (flower-cup) half as long as the carolla, and softly pubescent (hairy). The flower has the general structure of the pea family, and is succeeded by short, oblong, thickish pods one-half to three-quarters of an inch long, very smooth, and with about two seeds each.

Oxytropis Lamberti—There are two varieties—one large and one small—of this species, also known as "loco weed." They belong to the same family as the one previously described. The only difference except size is that the smaller of the two is more hairy or downy than the larger variety. The larger variety is about the size of the Astragalus, just described, and like it grows in strongly-rooted clumps, but it differs in having an erect habit, with shorter leaves and longer and more stiffly erect flower-stalks. The leaflets are longer and narrower—about one inch long by one-quarter to one-third inch wide—and hairy, especially on the upper surface. The flower-stalk proceeds from the root-stalk, and is usually nine to twelve inches long and naked except near the top, which has a rather close and thick cluster of flowers, much like those of the Astragalus in general appearance—but differing only in some minute characters, but yet which separate it into another genus. The bloom is succeeded by erect, lance-oblong, pointed pods of about an inch in length. The flowers are subject to much variation in color, some varieties being purple, some yellow and others being white. The species is very abundant on the high plains and in the mountains, ranging from British America to Mexico.

From the fact that it is more common than Astragalus, and also more of a plains than a mountain species, it may be inferred that this is the plant that has given so much trouble in Western Iowa and especially westward. It is important that every farmer or employe of of the farm should know it in order to effect its eradication.

Unlike the plant producing milk-sickness, there is little probability that it will die out in pastures. It is indigenous to a wide range of territory and soil. It must be eradicated by special means. As it is a fibrous-rooted perennial, this may be accomplished by thrusting a chisel-edged spade under it and prying it out. It may seem like a serious labor, but necessary, since the shorter the pasture becomes the more and more will stock become addicted to eating it and, like milk-sickness, no remedy is known for the disease.—Chicago Tribune.

—Colonel Bill Snort, editor of the Crosby County Clarion and Farmer's Vindicator, went to New Orleans not long since, and upon being shown his room at the hotel said: "This is a queer hotel. If a guest can pay his bills every week, what use has he got for a fire-escape? And if there is a fire-escape, why should he pay his bills at the end of the week? There is some mystery about this hotel that I can't understand."—Texas Siftings.

GYPSUM.

The Value of Plaster as a Land Dressing and Fertilizer.

Gypsum is a valuable fertilizer. Chemically pure it contains about twenty-three parts lime, forty-six sulphur, and twenty-one water. Its beneficial effects are owing to its soluble lime and its sulphuric acid. It fixes volatile and escaping carbonate of ammonia, and conveys them to the roots of plants. The carbonates of ammonia coming in contact with the sulphate of lime forms carbonate of lime and sulphate of ammonia. This fixing of ammonia makes gypsum especially valuable on the manure pile, where a few light dressings applied every day and a half will effect the preservation of nearly all the ammonia in the pile. Applied to light soils, especially soils deficient in lime, it is very valuable, doubling in some cases such crops as clover; but on clay soils also highly stimulating effects are obtained. The plaster should be in a very finely-ground condition to get the best effects the first season. The effect of plaster does not end with one or two seasons, but has been distinctly traced years after application. In a dry season little effect is obtained the first season, but in an ordinary or wet season the effect is very marked. While plaster is applied, and beneficially it is said by some who use it, on wheat and other grain crops, its best results are clover and grasses, turnips, peas and Indian corn. With the last crop it is sometimes put in the hills, a spoonful to each hill, though the view of general results extending over years of general distribution is perhaps the best way of applying it. With the other crops it may be sown either broadcast by hand, a method hard on the hands and eyes, or sown with drill or plaster sower. The quantity per acre sown on light soils should never be less than 100 pounds per acre. The best practice is to sow 200 or 300 pounds per acre. It is deemed that mixed with salt it gives better results than when used alone. The mixture varies in proportions in individual practice, some using 100 pounds gypsum to 200 pounds salt, while others use 200 pounds of each per acre. The best time to sow it is in the spring, very early, and give a second lighter dressing after vegetation is advanced a little, say about the middle of May. On an average of years well-ground gypsum is certainly found a highly profitable fertilizer on farms not too far removed from gypsum mines.—Canada Farmer.

Happy Condition of Farmers.

An old and successful agriculturist says: "It is now many years since when a school boy I listened to an agricultural address delivered by Isaac Hill, in Keene, to the farmers of Cheshire County. He was a noted man in New Hampshire, and also a Governor of the State. In speaking of the happy condition of farmers, he observed that 'the merchant failed nine times out of ten before a fortune is gained; the speculator ninety-nine times in a hundred; the mechanic and the lawyer gain only while their work is going on; the wages of the priest, like those of the common laborer, stop when he no longer works; the physician adds to his income no oftener than he visits the sick; the salaried man, if he saves at all, saves only a specific sum.' In this comparison, the farmer by dint of his husbandry produces constantly from the mother earth, while his associate callings are subject to the uncertainties, changes, and recurring vicissitudes incidental to other employments known to the society of man."

Truths for Flirting Girls.

Whatever idea the young girls who practice street flirting may entertain of their seemingly innocent pastime, it may be set down as a certainty that when a respectable young man desires the acquaintance of one who may some day become his wife he does not go out on the street and seek her acquaintance through a flirtation. But, on the other hand, the flirt of the street, no matter how innocent and fair her attentions may be, is the last person he would seek as his life's companion. He desires purity, without and above suspicion. The young lady who engages in this kind of pastime should bear in mind that she not only endangers her reputation and leaves a stain upon her good name, but her name is a by-word among those with whom she flirts, to be bandied about in the saloons, on the street corners and in the low-down, unholy places in the city, fastening on her otherwise fair name a stigma or stain that will follow her for years after she sees her folly and attempts to mend her ways.—Newark Advertiser.

Horses' Food.

The horse is more dainty about his food than any other farm animal excepting a sheep. No uneaten refuse should be left in the feeding boxes to sour under the animal's nose. In warm weather the danger of this is greater, especially when meal with wet, cut hay is given. This is the best possible feed for a working horse, but if left to many hired men it will be unsatisfactory from overfeeding. Some people seem to think that all there is in feeding a horse is to stuff his manger full with hay all the time and give him large amounts of grain or meal. Under such management a horse will grow poor and his appetite will fail, and with no appetite he cannot do efficient work.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

—Two Georgia girls recently decided that things were getting altogether too dull, and they would try and wake things up and have some fun. They dressed up in men's apparel, walked over to some of their neighbors' domiciles, passed off for tramps, frightened some women and children almost out of their wits, and would have made a thorough canvass of the town but for a little mouse, which appeared upon the scene, and caused them to identify themselves with the weaker sex, abruptly terminating their carnival.—St. Louis Post.

—It was well worth the while of a Manitou (Col.) correspondent to write this, and it is worth anyone's while to read it: "The Rockies are piled up like purple clouds against the brittle, sparkling sapphire skies. They trail off in a royal glory of color to the far South, their pink and purple peaks picked out with piles of everlasting snow. They are the 'Rocky' Mountans in all truth. Not a tree blooms upon their bald sterility of rock, and yet in the amber atmosphere, under the sweet, clean sunshine, they look as if the next puff of wind might float them away."

Hot Water in the Hands of an Excited Woman as a Fight Exterminator.

There was a case of assault and battery before one of the justices the other day, and a witness with a black eye, several strips of court plaster across his nose and one ear badly lopped over was asked by the defendant's lawyer if he saw Brown strike White.

"Can't say as I did," he replied.

"Did you see the whole affair?"

"Mostly."

"Well, how was it?"

"Well, Smith and me sot on the reaper talkin' evolution. Jones and Green sot on the grass talkin', and Brown and White sot by the edge of the straw-stack disputin' on politics. Three or four boys was in the barn gittin' up a dog fight."

"Yes, go on."

"Fust I knowed, somebody called somebody else a liar. Next I knowed evolution, politics and fighting dogs was a rolling over each other on the grass, and every man kicking and biting and hitting away fur all he was wuth."

"But did you see Brown strike White?"

"Can't say as I did."

DIED.

William H. Elson, Oct. 11th, 1885 Mr. Elson who had been for a long time a severe sufferer from lingering consumption, passed away at his home in Franklin. Mr. Elson was born in Hartford Co., Md., Dec. 3, 1829, and was 56 years, 10 months and 8 days old at his death. Six years ago Mr. Elson and family moved from Ohio to Dundee, Mich., which was their home five years. From Dundee they moved to Franklin last spring. The friends, with the body, took the four o'clock train on the Lake Shore road for Ohio, their former home. A widow and ten children survive to mourn the loss of a husband and father.

CORYELL.—In the township of Clinton, Michigan, Sept. 26th, 1885, Mrs. Joanna Coryell.

She was born in the State of New Jersey in the year 1815, and was the daughter of John and Wilmina Hoagland. She was twice married. Her first husband's name was William Harding, by whom she had two children, all of whom have passed away. In the spring of 1845 she came to Michigan, and in the fall of the same year was married to Ezra C. Corvell. For nearly forty years they walked together in the bonds of true affection and were one in purpose to secure a good home and make life a success. Many who were intimately acquainted with them can testify how well they succeeded. In early life she was the subject of religious impressions, but not till after her union with her second husband did she become a member of the church. This fellowship she kept up till her departure. Quite often, the place of their residence being changed it seemed necessary that a change of church home should also be made, or many privileges be lost. Being of a true catholic spirit she consented with her husband to unite where it seemed they ought to give their influence to help on the cause of Christ. They were always welcomed and at once made to feel at home wherever they went. The quiet gentle manner of the deceased won the affections of many, and secured for her a host of friends. She leaves a husband, three grandchildren, a brother and sister and many distant relatives behind. Her funeral was held at the Methodist Episcopal Church of Tecumseh, September 28th, and was largely attended by both relatives and others who had known her but to love her, and were there to pay their last tribute of affection to her memory.

Richmond, Hogan & Gadd shipped two car loads of sheep to Buffalo last Saturday. They are bound to keep pace with other stock drovers and if they loose on pork they try the mutton.

Lester B. Collar of Macon, was looking over his friends and acquaintances in this village, last Friday.

Mrs. Clough, editor of the Brooklyn Exponent, was smiling upon her old friends and associates in this village last Saturday, and they were right glad to see her.

A couple of young ladies were ascending the new tramway at the depot Saturday under the impression that they were climbing the golden stair; at least they were heard to give that information to a passer by.

A. M. Freeman, Esq., was in town last Friday, having been called here on legal business.

Eggs have taken an upward tendency.

The lyceum first and Alba next, was the program introduced by our high school representatives last Friday evening.

Will Cutting met with a serious accident at the factory Monday afternoon. He was running a lathe down in the engine room, when his sleeve became entangled in the machinery and drew his arm into connection with a shaft which bruised and lacerated it fearfully.

The public telephone has been transfered to a cosy little front room, fitted up for its especial benefit, by the manager, C. K. Spafford, over the post office, where the patrons will always find some person present to attend their bidding at all hours night and day, as the family living rooms are immediately connected therewith.

As some talk has been made upon the streets in regard to the convenience of the telephone up stairs, it might be well to mention that the very first message sent over the wires after its removal was given the operator by a man that has suffered with the rheumatism for years, and who made his way up those steps like a boy of ten summers. The stairs are very easy ones, and we don't know what the citizens of this place would do for a telephone if in Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor or Adrian, where they would be invited to climb two flights of stairs to make their wants known.

Frank McClure has at work for him again Will VanAntwerp, and, that Frank and Will make a full team is fully demonstrated by the departure of the work about as fast as they can make it.

A horse kicked A. P. Halliday and produced a fracture upon one of his arms near the elbow. It was getting better fast at last accounts under Dr. John Tuttle's treatment.

The attendance at the social held Friday evening at the home of Mrs. P. W. Cadmus was large, and Miss Flipsey with her grab bag took the cake; it was laughable to see the expressions of joy on the maidens faces as they sang "Hush little baby, don't you cry," for some of them grabbed little dollies. The next social will be held at the home of Mrs. Joshua Waring next week Friday evening.

Wheat looks well and as a whole, was sown much earlier than in previous years.

Potatoes a large yield but considerably effected with rot, claimed to have been caused by the heavy rain fall one Saturday evening about six weeks since, the ground being previously well filled with water. First, get the grade of the ditch, then make three stakes of 1x6 fencing, 5 feet long each, fitting one end to the ditch, dig down full depth at the outlet and set one stake, dig back a few feet and set another stake so that the tops of the two will range with the grade; make a mark on the handle of your tile hoe 5 feet from either end, which use as a measure; when digging making the mark range with the top of stakes, dig a few rods and set the third stake, and so on every few rods bringing up the farthest stake so that the range will be close by.

Judging from the amount of coal purchased by some of our citizens they are expecting severe weather ere long.

People come to this place from near other places to purchase lumber and building material of A. J. Hasbrouck, who by the way keeps a model lumber yard for a small town.

Parties who are building must needs get the frames closed soon as possible in order to escape working in the cold.

Next Saturday occurs the third game of base ball between the Onsted and Wolf Creek clubs.

AN ADRIAN POISONING AFFAIR.

Adrian is considerably excited over a poisoning case, that has developed in that city. On Thursday of last week the family of James Wickham, consisting of five members, were taken violently ill immediately after dinner. The cause was a mystery, but subsequent investigation points to the belief that they were poisoned. The following facts in relation to the affair are taken from the Record. Walter Wickham, a nephew of James Wickham, has been arrested on suspicion and lodged in jail.

There were five persons of the family of James Wickham, who were poisoned. They were Mr. Jas. Wickham and wife, Emma and John Wickham, and Grace Oram, eight year old daughter of Arthur Oram, whose wife is a daughter of James Wickham. Mrs. Wickham is reported to-day to be very low and Miss Emma Wickham is also in bad condition. The others are in better health but all are suffering from the effects of the dose. The affair is a puzzle. Circumstances at present seem to indicate to the officers that the young man arrested was the perpetrator of an attempt to murder a whole family. Whether he is the person and if so, whether he is sane are undetermined points. We learn that about eight years ago, young Wickham made an attempt to poison himself, and later attempted it again. He is said to be given to strange visions during which he imagines that various persons are seeking his life. Wickham's first attempt at suicide was by paris green, his second by swallowing buttons, pins, etc., all of which his stomach seemed to have resisted. On Monday evening Walter's cousin's Frank and John, were with him and everything that passed between them was of a friendly nature. That night after Walter retired he imagined or so claimed that his cousins had tried to poison him. Tuesday he visited Mrs. Charles Sanders, wife of a cousin, and asked for and obtained a phial, but for what purpose is not learned. On Thursday near noon, Walter was again at the home of his uncle, while the women of the family were preparing dinner, and it is said he was several times left alone in the room during the time. He did not take dinner there, and went away before the meal was ready. At the conclusion of the dinner Mrs. Wickham on rising from the table was seized with violent pain in the stomach, and the other members of the family became ill in the same manner, all within 20 minutes after the dinner was eaten. The little girl, Grace Oram, who was attending school, had nearly reached the school building when she was attacked in like manner as the others. Dr. Seger was called and found the symptoms to be those of arsenic poisoning, and administered antidotes. It was imagined that perhaps the tea drank contained some poisonous substance, but an analysis of some of it by the young doctor disclosed nothing poisonous.

—SCHOOL BLANKS.—We now have in stock at the HERALD office a full supply of school blanks of all kinds. School district officers will find it to their advantage to purchase their blanks of us.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT, OCTOBER 1, 1885

For this report returns have been received from 777 correspondents representing 625 townships. Five hundred and nine of these returns are from 367 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

The number of acres of wheat threshed up to about September 25, in the southern four tiers of counties, as shown by the records kept by threshers, was 249,251, the yield from which was 5,203,982 bushels,—an average of 20 and 88-hundredths bushels per acre.

The number of acres threshed in the northern counties was 46,789; yield, 892,559 bushels; average 19 and 8-hundredths bushels per acre.

The yield per acre in the southern counties is 17-hundredths of a bushel more, and in the northern counties 2 and 22-hundredths bushels less than reported in September.

Multiplying the acres in wheat in each county of the southern four tiers by the average yield per acre in the same county, and the acres in the northern counties by the average yield per acre in those counties, and adding the products we obtain 30,837,361 bushels as the probable total total yield in the state. This is 411,984 bushels less than the September estimate.

This is our final estimate of the wheat crop of 1885. It is believed to be as accurate as can be obtained at this date. Correspondents have secured the reports from threshings at great cost to themselves of time and labor. They have done all in their power to make the report accurate. If the average yield per acre in any case is too high it must be due either to an under-statement of acreage by farmers, or to a failure of threshers to note down for all jobs the acres, as well as the bushels threshed. The high averages in certain counties, particularly Genesee, Ingham, Lapeer, Livingston and Shiawassee, suggest that the threshers' records were not in every case reliable, but all reasonable allowance for errors from this source will not reduce the aggregate product in the State below thirty million bushels.

Wheat in stack has been considerably damaged by rain. Comparatively few stacks have wholly escaped injury. No attempt has been made to accurately estimate the amount of damage done, but it is quite certain that in numerous instances the loss from this cause will very nearly equal the extra profits anticipated from an exceptionally large yield.

To the question, which variety of wheat has given the highest yield per acre, 231 correspondents in the southern four tiers of counties answer Clawson, 86 Fultz, 36 Egyptian, 6 Lancaster, and 57 answers are divided between 22 other varieties. To the question, which variety has given the second highest yield, 110 answer Clawson, 100 Fultz, 78 Egyptian, and 59 Lancaster. To the question, which variety is third in order of yield, 41 answer Clawson, 78 Fultz, 70 Egyptian and 59 Lancaster. In the northern counties the Clawson leads all other varieties.

In the southern four tiers of counties 110,827 acres of oats threshed yielded 4,020,475 bushels; an average of 36 and 28-hundredths bushels per acre; and in the northern counties 31,683 acres threshed yielded 1,096,774 bushels, an average of 34 and 62-hundredths bushels per acre.

The number of acres of barley reported threshed in the State is 9,244, yielding 237,076 bushels, an average of 25 and 37-hundredths bushels per acre.

The condition of clover sown this year is reported at 87 per cent, the comparison being with vitality and growth of average years.

Corn is estimated to yield 67 bushels of ears, or about 33 bushels of shelled corn per acre in the southern counties, and 58 bushels of ears, or about 29 bushels of shelled corn per acre in the northern counties.

Potatoes will yield in the southern counties 78 per cent, and in the northern counties 90 per cent, of an average crop. There is very general complaint of heavy loss by rotting.

Winter apples will yield about one-half of an average crop.

There is no better household magazine than Demorest's Monthly; and the November number fully sustains its well-earned reputation. The stories are especially good, and the articles entitled "The city of Flowers," "London in July," and "The Two Great Poets of the Century," are admirable. "From Pencil to Brush" is continued, and the household suggestions are numerous and valuable. Many of the articles in this magazine are profusely illustrated, thus adding to their interest. This number is adorned with a steel engraving, as a frontispiece, and two suggestive plates, "Then and Now."

A prominent feature of the Magazine of American History for November will be an elegantly illustrated paper on the "Wadsworth House at Genesseo," by Frederic G. Mather, with portraits of James Wadsworth, the philanthropist, and of General James S. Wadsworth, who fell in the late civil War.

Tecumseh Herald

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 2, 1885.

WHY HE COMES NOT.

She stands at the garden gate to-night
No word does the maiden speak;
But her eyes are full of an anxious light,
And a tear-drop gleams like a diamond bright
On the rose of her velvet cheek.

The sun in its glory has long since set,
The robin has ceased its song;
With our baby's prattle the cabin is wet,
The toil of the day and he comes not yet.
Oh, why does he stay so long?

In vain she seeks to restrain her fears
As the precious minutes fleet;
And her heart is full of wild doubts and fears
As the twilight slightly and changes her cheer
For the sobbing of her lover's sweet.

Oh, temptress maid at the garden gate,
I pray thee wed to-night;
But yet there is time for the hour is late,
For thy lover's promise no longer wait,
He will not appear to-night.

Pain would the youth to thy side have flown,
But he hath a change of clothes,
For his washerwoman has put one gone,
To his shirts and so his clothes hold on Till he pays up the bill he owes.

WRONGLY SENTENCED.

An Innocent Man Set Free After Five Years' Confinement.

A Story That Shows How Misleading Circumstantial Evidence May Be—The Danger of Entirely Relying on Such Testimony.

"The hardships and wrongs incurred by convictions upon circumstantial evidence and mistaken identity are well illustrated in a case which came under my notice and with which I had something to do, which shows its uncertainty and the danger of relying entirely upon such testimony, however clear and convincing," remarked Matthew Adams, bailiff of the Colorado Supreme Court, to a press representative. Continuing, he said:

"In 1878 there was a man by the name of Mills arrested in Portland, Me., for arson, and delivered by the officer making the arrest into my custody as Sheriff of the county. He was charged with setting fire to the dwelling in which he then resided, belonging to one Haley. Mills was earnest and vehement in his denial of any knowledge of the origin of the fire. He was well and favorably known as a law-abiding and industrious citizen, enjoying the confidence of the community, and his neighbors were loath to believe him guilty of a capital crime.

"His protestations of innocence were of no avail, and, upon examination, the police magistrate found probable cause and he was held without bail to await the action of the grand jury. Some weeks elapsed before his indictment and time of trial, and I had frequent conversations with him relating to the circumstances of the fire. His manner, quiet manner and gentlemanly deportment made under my charge, his assertions, honest and straightforward statement asserting his entire innocence of the crime, excited my sympathy in his behalf and I became quite convinced he was innocent, and that the real criminal was still at large and unknown to the officers.

"Nothing occurred which cast any new light upon the crime, and the community generally came to believe in his guilt. The grand jury returned an indictment for arson against him, setting fire to a dwelling house in the night time, with intent to burn the same, for which the punishment under the laws of that State was death.

"He was put upon his trial on the indictment. He was defended by eminent and able counsel, and the petit jury was composed of upright and intelligent citizens, some of whom knew him well.

"His trial consumed seven days, and during the whole time he sat with calm, pale face, watching its progress with apparent indifference. His wife and lovely daughter—his only child—met him every morning as he was brought from the jail to the court-room, and they both sat by his side through all the hours of each day, showing a devotion and loving solicitude that was pathetic. He was a proud man and one could see that he keenly felt the humiliation and stigma of the occasion, but he was a brave man, and faced the charge with an unflinching confidence that he would be finally acquitted. The testimony and argument of the counsel was concluded; the oral charge of the court to the jury was given and the jury retired.

"During their deliberation upon the verdict which would restore him to liberty and the bosom of his family or to a solitary cell and final execution, Mills was apparently unmoved. When the jury finally brought in their verdict of guilty the unfortunate man seemed stunned for a moment, and his wife was so overcome that the officers were obliged to remove her, while his daughter, with loving devotion, remained by her father's side, her hand in his, trying to cheer and comfort him. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, pending which Mills was remanded to the custody of the jailer to await the judgment of the appellate court. Upon review, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment.

"Nothing now remained for the trial court to do but to pass the dread sentence. Mills was again brought into court and was sentenced to one year's solitary imprisonment and then to be hanged by the neck until he be dead, and 'may God have mercy on your soul' were the final words that fell from the lips of the presiding judge, like a knell on the poor condemned man's last hope.

"It became my duty, under the mandate of the court, to remove him to the State prison in execution of the sentence. I will not dwell upon the agony of the final parting from his wife and daughter at the jail, while both clung to him in an agony of despair. With a voice full of love and tenderness he told them to be of good cheer, to be hopeful, that he was innocent, and soon he would return to them again; and commending them to his Heavenly Father, who had said, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee,' he turned to me and said he was ready to go.

"There were five other prisoners who had been sentenced to various terms at hard labor, also awaiting removal to the penitentiary. We took evening passage by steamer for Rockland. I roped the five together, placing them in the cabin on main deck. After the moorings were cast off I myself, Mills and the quarter deck. I did not shackle the irons upon his wrists, not that I desired or intended to give him more liberty or better treatment than that we extended to the other prisoners on board, but looking upon him as an innocent victim of circumstances than as a felon I shrank from driving the iron fetters into his wrists.

"The steamer had crossed through the inner channel, passed Fort Williams Head, and was well out in the bay when we reached the middle of the city's lights were far behind us, the clear rays of the moon light lent a brilliancy along the steamer's course, and the water's glassy surface looked like burnished silver. The moon was shining clear and bright.

"No one could be seen as we passed the deck forward and aft except the helmsman at the wheel and the watch on the starboard bow. Mills was calm, but there was despair in his every movement and written in every lineament of his pale face. In a few hours I should deliver him to the warden to enter upon his solitary confinement before execution of the death sentence.

"We were standing alone just abaft the wheelhouse, looking out upon the moonlit waters, when I turned, and, facing before him with one hand upon his shoulder, I reminded him that he had been under my charge for several months, that during all that time his deportment had been unexceptionable, that he had been granted a fair and impartial trial—he had been defended by able and honest counsel—and while I believed his guilt, the presumption was too great and the evidence too circumstantial, too strong for the jury to report a different verdict from the one announced, and I said to him he could have no hope of executive clemency in his behalf that he was guilty within the jury had so declared and the court had so adjudged, and nothing could be gained now by falsehood or equivocation. I charged him to tell me the truth relating to the fire, and the poor condemned man quickly turned toward me, the light sea breeze fanning the cold locks back from his brow, the reflection of the pale moon and starlight upon his face, so full of hopelessness, and resting one hand upon my shoulder, and with the other raised toward heaven, he said:

"'Realizing the awful doom awaiting me, after the year of anguish and torture, my soul cries out to the God of the south to pronounce upon me, I am to suffer an ignominious death, that my hope of heaven I know or care little, I know no more than that I am glorified upon yourself. O what a wicked fool I should be to make such a declaration! I have received but kindness at your hands during my months of imprisonment. I am not saying that my trial was not a fair one. I find no fault with the judge, jury, and my counsel were able, honest and faithful in my behalf. Yes, I repeat, and this is all that is left me to say, a fatal error leads me—that grave, dark, fearful grave, which I am soon to enter—I am innocent.'

"The poor man staggered like one struck a blow on the deck. Never before was I so impressed upon any occasion. He was silent for a moment. His words impressed me strongly. I could not judge of the character, and then I made a promise that I would do all in my power to save him from the gallows.

"I hastened home with the other prisoners I had in charge to the warden of the prison with papers of commitment. I could make no stay, as the steamer was starting for my return to the city immediately. I hurriedly bade him good bye, and told he had no fear that I would not forget him. It was painful to see that strong man pining to me, weeping like a child, until he was forcibly removed by the turnkey.

"Upon my return to Portland I at once conferred with the county attorney, and communicated to him my experience and my firm belief in Mills' innocence. He heartily seconded my efforts, and we soon had a petition signed by the judge who presided at the trial, eleven of the jury who composed the trial panel, the county attorney, and nearly all the county and city officers, with a large number of prominent citizens. The prayer of the petition was that the Governor commute his sentence to imprisonment for life. It was presented to his counsel, the Governor granted the prayer, and Mills' life was saved.

"Some five years later, at nine o'clock in the morning, a white-haired man, weighed down with sorrow, came into my office and inquired for me. An apparent stranger stood in the doorway. He looked earnestly for a moment, and, seeing no recognition in my face, with a sad, tremulous voice, he said: 'Is it possible you have forgotten me?' Not until then did I know that he was the same man who five years before had been convicted and sentenced to death for a crime he never committed. Noticing my astonishment at seeing him again in Portland and at liberty, he at once explained that the warden had received a telegram from the Governor ordering his immediate and unconditional release.

"In explanation of this action by the executive, I will simply state that some years after Mills' conviction a notorious character was arrested in the city for highway robbery, for which he was indicted, tried, convicted, and sentenced to thirteen years at hard labor, and was confined in the same penitentiary where Mills had so long suffered.

"His dissipated habits had already destroyed his health, consequently he soon broke down under the rigors of prison discipline. Death was fast approaching him; its terrors aroused his scarred conscience to right a terrible wrong. Having sent for the warden, the dying criminal confessed that it was he who had set fire to the dwelling by throwing a roll of cloth saturated with petroleum through the window and under the bed of the sleeping occupants that he was incited to inflict this cruel wrong upon Mills in revenge for an old time grudge and enmity against him.

"The saddest part of it all was that, after having endured all these years of punishment he came back to find his daughter and only child dead, and his faithful, loving, devoted wife totally blind.

"Circumstantial evidence, while in its general character often seems more reliable than the oral testimony of living witnesses, who may be prejudiced or biased, is, nevertheless, sometimes too strong—proves too much, and is liable to be misapplied."—Denver Tribune-Republican.

THE CHARTER OAK.

Historical Trees to Be Found in All Parts of the World.

On August 20, 1866, was blown down the famous oak called Charter Oak, a tree which for many years was the object of veneration, because it was believed that it had been the means of saving the charter of the State of Connecticut. The Winfarthing Oak in England, now white and hollow, measuring some seventy feet in circumference and capable of holding in its cavity not fewer than thirty persons, was called the Old Oak as far back as the days of William the Conqueror. What is known as the Salcey Forest Oak, a really picturesque ruin, and the object of many pilgrimages, is supposed to be 1,500 years old. It measures forty-seven feet round near the ground, and has a cavity fourteen feet eight inches, and is twenty-nine feet in circumference inside. The Chandos Oak, near Southgate, on the grounds of Michendon House, is sixty feet high and eighteen feet three inches in diameter. When in full foliage it forms a magnificent natural canopy, and has the appearance of a gigantic tent. In 1788, there fell to the ground one of the oldest and most honored trees in England. It was called Magdalen Oak, or the Great Oak of Oxford. It was called the Old Oak by way of distinction when Magdalen was founded, and it was supposed to have been a sapling when Alfred the Great founded the university. There was at one time on Mount Etna a chestnut tree, which measured 204 feet in circumference; and in the hollow some country people contrived to construct a house in which they lived. There is a yew tree near Staines, called the Oakerwike Yew, which is supposed to be at least one thousand years old. It was at this tree Henry VIII. was in the habit of meeting Anne Boleyn, while she was residing at Staines, and within sight of it was signed England's great charter. It measured twenty-seven feet eight inches. Remarkable trees are to be found in all the old countries. They are numerous in France, Italy, Spain, Germany and Austria. At the site of Heliopolis, about seven or eight miles from Cairo, Egypt, the traveler is shown a tree, still in life, but dreadfully hacked with the knives of strangers, where, according to tradition, Joseph and Mary and the infant Jesus found a temporary resting place. Our own Wellingtonias, 450 feet high, sixty feet in circumference, a date back as far, perhaps, as the days when, as Dr. Lindley puts it, "Sam-on was slaying his Philistines." Time would fail, also, to tell of the famous forests and parks and avenues which have commanded the admiration of many generations.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A GREAT CURE.

Three Wormy Herrings the One Elixir for Love-sick Youths.

"O, go way!" he said, as the other boy bent over him and asked the cause of his trouble.

"Jim, have ye got a headache—one o' them reglar old rippers what draws yer shoulders right up to yer ears?"

"Naw!"

"Got the ager?"

"Naw!"

"Some big boy gin ye a lickin' for sassin' him?"

"Um!"

"Is she beautiful?"

"Yes."

"Rich and tony?"

"You bet!"

"And there is a wide social gulf between you?"

"Um—yes."

"And her parents are implacable?"

"Yes."

"Then, Jim, cheer up. I'll stand by ye. I'll get a note to her. I'll help ye plan the lopement. I'll lend ye my rope-ladder and Sunday coat and silver watch-chain, and I'll gin ye five nickels to help you out on a bridal tower. Come, Jim—come down the alley and help me eat a muskmelon and three herrings. I've been there, and I know. When a gal's implacable dad stands between her and the kid who wants to call her his'n it takes herrings—herrings with worms in 'em—three for a cent—to pull his pining soul back into the socket. SIZING HIM UP.

How an Experienced Mother Ascertained the Financial Standing of Her Daughter's Lover.

"What were you and that John Murphy talking about so long last night?" asked Mrs. Chinkle of her daughter.

"O, he was telling me about himself and his people, his hopes and aspirations."

"Um—um," murmured the old lady, "he told you all that, did he?"

"Yes, mamma; and he told me what he was worth, too."

The old lady became interested.

"Ah," said she, "he told you that, did he?"

"Yes, mamma."

"And how much did he say he was worth?"

"Nothing, mamma."

"I thought so, or it wouldn't have taken him so long to tell it."

"O, mamma—" pleaded the girl.

"Don't 'O, mamma' me," interrupted the mother, "I know all about that sort of stock, and you can send him word that if he comes here again he'd better wear a life preserver."—Merchant Traveler.

FASHION NOTES.

New York Styles and Oddities in a Nutshell.

Bustles are worn lower down.

The days of flounces are no more.

Plush will be very fashionable again.

English styles are more popular than ever.

The shelf-like bustle is no longer in fashion.

The tailor-made suit is the popular fall frock.

Turbans are the correct hats for windy days.

Children's frocks are made with waists again.

Molière fronts are seen only on house dresses.

We are to have another velvet and velveteen season.

Braid is again in fashion, but for cloth dresses only.

Large rosary beads are used in dress ornamentation.

Children will wear a great deal of navy blue combined with scarlet.

Capes, fichus and short mantles will all be worn for early fall wraps.

The bustle is moribund. It is sinking lower and is less pronounced in form.

Even little girls' dresses are made with plain skirts bordered, not flounced.

Thibet cloth, with boucle borders, appears among light wools for fall wear.

Large flat buttons are the style for street jackets, Newmarkets and long ulsters.

Scarlet and dark navy blue are introduced in combination costumes and carriage jackets.

Young girls wear sailor hats this fall; but they are very easy to blow off in a high wind.

Small bonnets, with strings, are worn by matrons, but not by young girls, on the other side.

Motifs of cork cut in fanciful designs are introduced into dress trimmings by English dress tailors.

New woolens woven to simulate lace over grounds of contrasting color are termed Henri II. guipure.

Another season of lace is predicted, and indicated by the first importations of dresses, hats, and bonnets.

Waistcoats, which are a feature in fall frocks, are narrower and frequently in a point at the waist line.

A new ribbed velveteen, the counterpart of cordaroy, but in lighter weight, takes the name of corde de la reine.

Dress bodices, basques, jackets and round waists all have waistcoats more frequently than any other finish.

The English walking jacket and the Newmarket coat are brought again this fall, and in more severely plain styles than ever.

Golden brown plush cuffs, collars, and waistcoats are seen on some very jaunty white Jersey jackets, gilt buttons adding to the dressy effect.

The new hats have crowns higher than ever. The new bonnets are very small, but are trimmed all on top, to look as tall as possible.

None but young ladies and brides should wear hats. The bonnet is the proper out-of-door head gear for a married woman, the bride of a year ago.

Some of the handsomest fancy woolen cloths show very dark green interwoven with two shades of blue, describing a small check on the dark green ground.

Wood, lead, porcelain, glass, and gold beads of large and various sizes are used to make passementeries, motifs, braids, and galloons as decorative as possible.

The jersey jackets have seams just like any other jacket or basque, and the waistcoat is the almost invertable feature in the latest importations and production of the articles.

Parisian women are trimming their high hats at the back instead of in front as we do in America, but the trimming is so arranged as to fall over the top and reach the front of the crown.

Draped tabliers and tunics are still worn by fashionable women when the frock is made of supple and plastic fabric, but, as a rule, the new goods are so heavy as to make plain skirts with no draping or looping to speak of a necessity and the rule.—N. Y. Sun.

A GOOSE FARM.

A Virginia Idea Which Has Proved to be Profitable.

There is a goose ranch located on the eastern shore of Virginia, covering nearly 3,000 acres, over which the feathered occupants, nearly 5,000, are free to roam. The farm is devoted exclusively to producing the raw materials needed for the fine down quilts. Several species of geese are bred, all of them being, however, of American lineage. The largest specimens are the swan-geese, and the plumage of all is of snowy whiteness. The birds are regularly fed with corn and other grains, and are given the utmost freedom consistent with the prevention of straying and loss. Herders are employed to keep a watchful eye on them, and sheds for shelter are provided in case of inclement or especially severe weather, but the birds rarely use them. About every six weeks the plucking takes place. Only the breast and portions of the sides are touched, the feathers of the back, the wings and the tail being left intact. It requires nearly one hundred average geese to furnish a pound of down, though the smaller feathers, which are also taken, weigh much heavier. These feathers, however, form an entirely separate grade from the valuable down. The average life of a goose is said to be about forty years, and they produce from six to ten eggs per annum, a large proportion of which are hatched. A bird hatched in February is in condition for plucking the following August, and so on thereafter every six or eight weeks. The feathers are packed in sacks, and sent to the Philadelphia factory, where they are trimmed, washed, steamed and otherwise prepared for their ultimate uses.—Western Rural.

—An Irishman on a New York steamer told to run up the American flag, managed to get the stars and stripes upside down, and several boats went to the steamer's assistance because of the signal of distress.—N. Y. Herald.

"Doctor," said a despairing patient to his physician, "I am in a dreadful condition! I can neither lay nor set What shall I do?" "I think you had better roost;" was the reply. Now, if we consider that this poor fellow was all contorted with rheumatism, the doctor would have done much better by prescribing a bottle of Salvation Oil, which would have relieved his patient at once. Price 25 cents a bottle.

Price 50 cents and $1.

A metal hitherto unknown, and which is said to be likely to supplant nickel in general use, has been discovered in the Lehigh Valley.

News About Town.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, and Consumption. Baker & Hall will give any person a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. Price 50 cents and $1.

Taken together, all the beauties of art and nature do not interest the inquisitive female so much as the view she gets through the key hole.

"Most of these hair preparations don't work," writes Mr. J. S. Burdiet, of St. Louis, "but Parker's Hair Balsam is an honorable exception. My hair was thin and permanently gray. The Balsam made it brown again and soft as in my boyhood."

After a druggist has filled a perscription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

Thousands of cases of kidney diseases have been cured by Hunt's Remedy. Never fails.

A Fortunate Discovery.

A new light is thrown on the subject of Consumption by Dr. Kemp, discoverer of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and lungs. A remedy that has proved itself to be a remarkable compound. It does its work thoroughly, stopping a hacking cough instantly. Sold by Baker & Hall. Price 50 cents and $1. Trial size free. Get one.

The little daughter of the editor of the Tiffin, O., Daily Star was immediately and permanently releaved of a severe cough by three doses of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. A twenty-five cent bottle of this valuable remedy will cure the worst cough.

A little dot of a girl coaxed two nickel from her father on Thanksgiving day, saying she would use one for candy and the other she would give to the missionaries. Before executing her expressed intentions she lost one while at play, and running to her mamma, said: "Oh, mamma, I have lost my missionary nickel."
